Principles of Income Tax Deductions

PORTFOLIO DESCRIPTION

Tax Management Portfolio, Principles of Income Tax Deductions, No. 503-4th, analyzes in depth what income tax deductions are, how they function, and how they interact with other tax items. After examining the legal principles of general applicability to deductions, the Portfolio organizes the deductions into logical categories, including those allowed in computing adjusted taxable income, deductions for personal expenses, deductions allowed to corporations, etc. Deductions not discussed elsewhere in the Portfolios are analyzed thoroughly in this Portfolio and deductions that are discussed elsewhere in the U.S. Income series are organized into relevant categories but not discussed.

This Portfolio may be cited as Gutting, 503-4th T.M., Principles of Income Tax Deductions.

This Bloomberg Tax Portfolio is not intended to provide legal, accounting, or tax advice for any purpose and does not apply to any particular person or factual situation. DETAILED ANALYSIS

I. Definition and Function of Deductions

A. Introduction

Deductions represent one of the most significant concepts of the federal income tax system. Aside from exclusions from gross income, deductions represent the only step in the computation of income tax liability that reduce taxable income and, thus, reduce income tax liability.¹ Deductions are an element in the computation of taxable income for every type of person or entity, except for nonresident aliens and foreign corporations subject to the flat 30% tax.² For example, deductions are available to individuals,³ corporations,⁴ exempt organizations,⁵ banks and common trust funds,⁶ trusts and estates,⁷ life insurance companies,⁸ other insurance companies,⁹ regulated investment companies,¹⁰ and real estate investment trusts.¹¹ Deductions are taken into account even with respect to partnerships and real estate mortgage investment conduits, which are not subject to taxation.¹² However, certain types of deductions are limited to individuals,¹³ and others are limited to corporations.¹⁴

A deduction lowers a taxpayer's taxable income, so the ultimate tax savings depends on the taxpayer's marginal tax rate. A deduction is unlike a tax credit, which provides a dollar-for-dollar reduction to a taxpayer's tax liability.¹⁵ For example, if an individual taxpayer has a marginal tax rate of 30%, then a $1,000 deduction would generate a tax savings of $300 ($1,000 × 30%). But, if an individual taxpayer had a $15,000 tax liability, a $1,000 tax credit would reduce a taxpayer's tax liability down to $14,000. Ultimately, in this example, the $1,000 credit offers the taxpayer $700 more in tax savings than a $1,000 deduction.

Deductions are not only a major step in the computation of federal taxable income, but they also are, either individually or in the aggregate, an element in the computation of other deductions or deduction limitations. For example, deductions are used as a computational base for certain exclusions or other deductions and as an eligibility factor for particular tax benefits. Deductions also are used as a measure for other steps in the taxable income and tax liability computation. For instance, some deductions reduce adjusted gross income¹⁶ (AGI) and, in some instances, AGI is used to determine availability or amount for a specific deduction.

More importantly, deductions are a matter of legislative grace.¹⁷ In contrast to the determination of gross income, with respect to which courts must determine whether an item is income without the benefit of a statutory definition of income, courts have no recourse but to the statutory language in determining whether a deduction is allowable.¹⁸ The scope of transactions that generate deductions is a narrow slice of the much wider band of transactions that reduce the taxpayer's economic wealth. Thus, unlike gross income, which is a concept that includes all potential realized accessions to wealth that are not the subject of a specific statutory exclusion, a transaction does not generate a deduction unless there is a specific statutory provision allowing the deduction.¹⁹ The deduction is allowed only to the extent permitted by the statute, and only to the extent another statutory provision does not disallow the otherwise allowable deduction.²⁰ The courts have no power to change the language of a statute or to create a new deduction to make a situation more equitable for the taxpayer.²¹ Accordingly, a taxpayer seeking a deduction must be able to point to an applicable statute and show that he comes within its terms.²² Consequently, in a wide variety of circumstances, transactions do not generate deductions even though the taxpayer's wealth has been reduced.

The types of expenses for which Congress permits deductions range from those directly connected with generating gross income to those for which deductions are provided as a matter of social or other policy. However, deductions for trade or business expenses²³ and income-producing activity expenses²⁴ are the most common. Congress also has determined that some or all of a taxpayer's expenditures for items such as interest, taxes, charitable contributions, and medical expenses should be deductible.²⁵ Thus, in any particular area of activity, some transactions generate deductions and some do not. Generally, the closer the activity is to a trade or business, the more likely it is that the expenses of a particular transaction will be deductible.²⁶ Conversely, the closer an activity is to a personal endeavor, the more likely it is that the expenses of a particular transaction will not be deductible.²⁷ However, there are exceptions to these general principles. For example, unreasonable business compensation is not deductible²⁸ but real estate taxes paid on a personal residence are deductible subject to limitations.²⁹

B. Definition of Deduction

Although the Internal Revenue Code contains specific definitions of each allowable deduction,³⁰ it does not contain a general definition of deduction. Instead, the clear implication of the statutory language provides a commonly accepted definition.³¹ Implicitly, a deduction is any amount that is allowable as a subtraction from gross income for the purpose of computing taxable income. In contrast, an amount that is not included in gross income is not a deduction, but is an exclusion.³²

C. Impact on Tax Account

1. Introduction

Federal income tax liability is determined as a percentage of taxable income,³³ which is derived by subtracting deductions from gross income.³⁴ Thus, in general, amounts allowable as deductions generate decreases in tax liability and amounts disallowed as deductions generate increases in tax liability. However, when considering a particular taxpayer's specific circumstances, it can be misleading to rely on the generalization about the impact of deductions on income tax liability. This arises in part from the impact of the resulting change in a deduction on the other deductions and credits that are measured, in whole or in part, by reference to deductions or an amount based in part on some or all of the taxpayer's deductions. It also arises because the impact of a deduction on alternative minimum tax liability may differ from its impact on regular tax liability, a phenomenon that reflects the different treatment of certain deductions for purposes of computing regular taxable income and alternative minimum taxable income. In some instances, a deduction can cause a taxpayer's tax liability to increase, and whether a taxpayer can ignore a deduction on account of this phenomenon has triggered an intense debate.³⁵ The treatment of deductions for alternative minimum tax purposes is described in I.C.3., below, and is discussed in detail in 587 T.M., Noncorporate Alternative Minimum Tax, and 752 T.M., Corporate Alternative Minimum Tax.

2. Tax Element Computations

a. Deductions Used in Computational Base

In many instances, some or all of a taxpayer's deductions are used as an element in the computation of a gross income inclusion or exclusion, another deduction, a credit, or another amount. Important examples include:

- Certain deductions or deduction disallowances are ignored, redefined, or recomputed in determining earnings and profits of a corporation.³⁶
- Certain deductions are allowed in determining earned income for purposes of self-employed qualified plans.³⁷
- Certain deductions are allowed in annualizing taxable income for the period of change when an accounting period shifts to or from a 52–53 week year.³⁸
- Certain deductions are allowed in computing modified taxable income for purposes of annualizing the tax liability for a short accounting period resulting from a change in the taxpayer's accounting period.³⁹
- Certain deductions are allowed in computing distributable net income.⁴⁰
- Certain deductions are disallowed or recomputed in determining an investment company's earnings and profits.⁴¹

The following deduction limits apply to state and local income tax (or, if elected, sales tax) and state and local property tax or personal property tax: tax years 2018 through 2024, $10,000 ($5,000 married filing separate); tax year 2025, $40,000 ($20,000 married filing separate); tax year 2026, $40,400 ($20,200 married filing separate); tax years 2027 through 2029, 101% of the preceding calendar year limit (half for married filing separate); and tax years after 2029, $10,000 ($5,000 married filing separate). No deduction for foreign real property is allowed. This limitation does not apply to any taxes paid or accrued in carrying on a trade or business, for the production or collection of income, management or maintenance of property held for production of income, or in connection with the determination, collection, or refund of any tax. §164(b)(6), amended by the One Big Beautiful Bill Act (OBBBA), Pub. b. Deductions Used as an Eligibility Factor

(1) Gross Income Inclusions and Exclusions

In certain instances, deductions are used as a factor for eligibility for an exclusion from gross income or for the application of a specific gross income inclusion provision. Important examples include:

- The exclusion for employee achievement awards is based on the employer's deduction⁷⁶ amount.⁷⁷
- Certain deductions are a factor in determining whether the exclusion for dealers in tax-exempt securities applies.⁷⁸
- The loss deduction⁷⁹ is a factor in determining whether the gross income inclusion for restoration of value of certain securities applies.⁸⁰
- Previous medical expense deductions⁸¹ limit the application of the exclusion for damages.⁸²
- Previous medical expense deductions⁸³ limit the exclusion for medical plan benefits.⁸⁴
- An exception to the inclusion of discharge of indebtedness income in gross income applies if the discharged indebtedness would have generated a deduction if paid.⁸⁵
- Amounts included in gross income under the tax benefit rule depend in part on amounts previously deducted.⁸⁶
- The exclusion for cost-sharing payments does not apply to amounts properly deductible.⁸⁷
- The definition of working condition fringes eligible for exclusion from gross income is based on the deductibility of the equivalent expenditure.⁸⁸
- Qualified higher education expenses, for purposes of the exclusion, are defined, in part, by the allowance to the taxpayer of a dependency exemption deduction⁸⁹ for certain dependents.⁹⁰

- An individual retirement account (IRA) distribution is not taxed if, among other things, no §219 deduction was allowed for the amount distributed.⁹¹

- The amount deducted under §219 is a factor in determining the taxation of IRA distributions of excess contributions.⁹²

- The exclusion of charitable gift annuities from the amount on which certain organizations providing commercial-type insurance are taxed applies if, among other things, a deduction is allowed under §170 or §2055.⁹³

(2) Deductions

In certain instances, deductions are used as a factor for eligibility for another deduction. For example, in the former §812, the life insurance company 100% dividend was defined by reference to the deductions for dividends paid.⁹⁴

(3) Tax Credits

In certain instances, deductions are used as a factor for eligibility for tax credits. Important examples include:

- Allowance of the dependent care credit requires, among other things, that the payment not be made to a person with respect to whom the taxpayer is entitled to the dependency exemption⁹⁵ deduction for certain dependents.⁹⁶
- Allowance of the hope and lifetime learning credits for persons other than the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse requires, among other things, that the taxpayer be entitled to the dependency exemption deduction⁹⁷ for certain dependents.⁹⁸
- A married individual is not taken into account in determining a taxpayer's qualification for the earned income credit, unless the taxpayer is allowed the dependency exemption deduction⁹⁹ for that individual.¹⁰⁰
- In calculating basic research payments taken into account for purposes of the credit for increasing research activities, the taxpayer must compute a qualified organization base period amount, and one of the elements in that computation is the maintenance-of-effort amount, of which non-designated university contributions is in turn an element, which is based in part on the taxpayer's charitable contribution deduction.¹⁰¹

• Foreign taxes paid with respect to corporate distributions that, among other things, qualify for the dividends received deduction¹⁰⁴ are not eligible for the foreign tax credit.¹⁰⁵

(4) Tax Attributes and Definitions

In certain instances, deductions are used as a factor for eligibility for tax attributes, such as status and character, or for the definition of certain amounts. Important examples include:

• Qualification for head of household filing status requires, among other things, that the taxpayer be entitled to the dependency exemption deduction for certain dependents.¹⁰⁶

• Whether the taxpayer is claiming the standard deduction or itemized deductions determines the type of tax table provided for the taxpayer.¹⁰⁷

• The availability of the dividends paid deduction¹⁰⁸ is a factor in the definition of distributee corporation, for purposes of the special earnings and profits rule.¹⁰⁹

• The character of distributions in redemption of stock to pay death taxes is determined in part by the amount of §2053 estate tax deductions.¹¹⁰

• The transfer of a liability that would generate a deduction is excluded from the §357 assumption of liability rules.¹¹¹

• The former active trade or business exception to the §367 exception to §351 nonrecognition does not apply to the extent certain deducted losses, among other things, exceed certain other amounts.¹¹²

• The application of the deduction limitations of §219(b)(3) to an employee-funded pension trust is used as one of many qualification tests for the trust's tax-exempt status.¹¹³

• The total of certain deductions is used in determining whether personal holding company classification is avoided.¹¹⁴

• The determination of the status of a regulated investment company is made in part by the relative amount of §561 deductions.¹¹⁵

• The gross receipts element of the §1244 stock definition does not apply if certain allowable deductions exceed gross income.¹¹⁶

(5) Nontax Financial Benefits

In certain instances, deductions are used as an eligibility factor for financial benefit not directly related to taxes. Important examples include:

• Amounts that can be recovered under the War Claims Act¹¹⁷ are reduced by any federal income tax liability reduction arising from any deduction allowed with respect to the losses for which the claim is filed.¹¹⁸

• The computation of net earnings from self-employment for purposes of determining federal old age, survivors, and disability insurance benefits includes the subtraction of some, but not all, deductions allowed for federal income tax purposes.¹¹⁹

• The computation of wages for purposes of determining federal old age, survivors, and disability insurance benefits excludes amounts paid as reimbursement for deductible moving expenses.¹²⁰

• One factor in computing deemed average total wages for purposes of determining federal old age, survivors, and disability insurance benefits is deferred compensation amounts, but calculated without including any amount for which a federal income tax deduction is allowed by reason of a contribution to a §501(c)(18) plan.¹²¹

(6) Nontax Attributes and Definitions

In certain instances, deductions are used as a factor for eligibility for nontax attributes, such as status and character, or for the definition of certain amounts. Important examples include:

• The Securities Act of 1933¹²² does not apply to an annuity plan that meets the requirements for the deduction of the employer's contributions¹²³ for income tax purposes.¹²⁴

• The Securities Exchange Act of 1934¹²⁵ does not apply to an annuity plan that meets the requirements for the deduction of the employer's contributions¹²⁶ for income tax purposes.¹²⁷

• The registration requirements for securities under the Securities Exchange Act of 1934¹²⁸ does not apply to an annuity plan which meets the requirements for the deduction of the employer's contributions¹²⁹ for income tax purposes.¹³⁰

- An investment company subject to the Investment Advisers Act of 1940¹³¹ does not include an annuity plan which meets the requirements for the deduction of the employer's contributions¹³² for income tax purposes.¹³³
- The prohibition in the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974¹³⁴ against permitting assets of a covered plan to inure to the benefit of an employer does not apply to the return of an employer contribution if the contribution was conditioned on the deductibility of the contribution for federal income tax purposes.¹³⁵
- The prohibition against reduction by the board of directors of the capital of a system institution subject to Farm Credit Administration regulation through the payment of patronage refunds or dividends or the retirement of stock does not apply if, among other things, the system institution is subject to federal income taxation and the cash portion is the minimum amount required to qualify the refund as a deductible patronage dividend¹³⁶ for federal income tax purposes.¹³⁷
- One element in the computation of the limitation on the amount deposited into a capital construction fund with respect to eligible vessels is the depreciation deduction¹³⁸ with respect to those vessels.¹³⁹
- One element in the capital account portion of the capital construction fund with respect to eligible vessels is the amount that would be deductible as a dividends received deduction¹⁴⁰ by the person maintaining the fund if the deduction were not otherwise precluded by the rules applicable to capital construction funds.¹⁴¹

c. Deductions Not Taken into Account for Certain Purposes

(1) Computational Purposes

Amounts allowable as deductions generally are treated as deductions for all computational purposes, subject to certain exceptions, including:

- For purposes of computing the special small bond issue limit that is part of the determination of whether interest on a particular bond is tax-exempt, research and experimental expenditures for which a §174A deduction is allowed are not taken into account.¹⁴²

- In computing taxable income for purposes of the taxable income limitation on the amount of the taxpayer's §179 expensing deduction, the §179 deduction is not taken into account.¹⁴³

- The limitation on the taxpayer's aggregate dividends received deduction is based on a percentage of taxable income computed without regard to the net operating loss deduction, the domestic production activities deduction, the dividends received deduction, and the capital loss carryback deduction for the tax year.¹⁴⁴

- In computing the earned income limitation on a self-employed taxpayer's deferred compensation contributions, the deduction for those contributions is not taken into account.¹⁴⁵

- In determining the aggregate tax benefit resulting from the tax-exempt status of a terminated private foundation, an amount that must be calculated as part of computing the tax on a terminated private foundation, there must be computed the tax increases that would have resulted in the tax liabilities of all substantial contributors to the foundation had all their §170, §2055, §2522, and similar charitable contribution deductions for transfers to the foundation been disallowed.¹⁴⁶

- In computing taxable income for purposes of the formula used to calculate a taxpayer's deduction for bad debt reserves under §593, the deduction for additions to bad debt reserves is not taken into account.¹⁴⁷

- The limitation on an insurance company's dividends received deduction is based on a percentage of life insurance company taxable income computed without regard to the small life insurance company deduction,¹⁴⁸ the operations loss deduction, the dividends received deduction, and the capital loss carryback deduction for the tax year.¹⁴⁹

- The special deduction for Blue Cross and Blue Shield organizations is limited to taxable income computed without regard to that deduction.¹⁵⁰

- In computing taxable income for purposes of doubling rates on citizens and residents of certain foreign countries, the deduction for personal and dependency exemptions under §151 and the special deductions solely for corporations under §241 through §249 are not taken into account.¹⁵¹

- In determining the amount of tax that would be computed on foreign mineral income for purposes of the reduction in the foreign tax credit for taxes paid on foreign mineral income, the deduction under §613 for percentage depletion is not taken into account.¹⁵²

- In computing the taxable income component of the formula used to set the §904 tax-based limitation on the foreign tax credit, the taxable income of individuals, trusts, and estates is computed without regard to the personal exemption deduction.¹⁵³
- In computing overall foreign loss for purposes of the recapture of overall foreign loss under §904(f), the deductions for net operating losses, foreign expropriation losses, and casualty losses are not taken into account.¹⁵⁴
- In computing housing expenses for purposes of the §911 exclusion, the §163 interest deduction, the §164 deduction for taxes, and the §216(a) tenant-shareholder cooperative housing deductions are not taken into account to the extent they are attributable to the taxpayer's housing.¹⁵⁵
- In computing the limitation on the amount treated as a dividend under §1248(a), the foreign income tax deduction is not taken into account.¹⁵⁶
- In computing an S corporation's excess net passive income, the net §172 operating loss deduction and the special deductions for corporations under §241 through §249, other than the §248 organizational expenditure amortization deduction, are not taken into account.¹⁵⁷

(2) Characterization and Classification Purposes

Generally, an amount that is allowable as a deduction is treated as a deduction for all purposes of characterization and classification. An amount that is allowable as a deduction under one Code provision generally is not classified as an amount allowable as a deduction under another Code provision. However, there are exceptions to this principle; examples include:

- In computing the earned income credit, the deduction under §164(f) for self-employment taxes paid by self-employed individuals is taken into account in determining self-employment income,¹⁵⁸ even though it is not taken into account in determining self-employment income for purposes of the computing the self-employment tax.¹⁵⁹
- The basis reduction required if an investment credit is allowable is treated as a deduction subject to §1245 or §1250 depreciation recapture.¹⁶⁰
- Amortization deductions under §291(b)(2) for §263(c), §616(a), and §617(a) deductions disallowed under §291(a) are treated as deductions subject to §1254 recapture.¹⁶¹
- Life insurance company deductions under §808(c) for policyholder dividends, under §807 for reserve adjustments, and under §805(a)(1) for death benefits and other amounts are classified as unallocable to any item or class of gross income for purposes of determining the amount of income from sources within and without the United States.¹⁶²

- Any tax not allowed as a foreign tax credit by application of the §901(j)(2) ineligible country rule is not treated as a nondeductible tax under §78 and §275.¹⁶³
- Certain basis reductions made as a condition for the exclusion from gross income of income from the discharge of indebtedness are treated as deductions subject to §1245 or §1250 depreciation recapture.¹⁶⁴
- The tax computation mitigation provision for restoration of an item previously included in gross income under the claim of right doctrine is available only if, inter alia, the restoration qualifies the taxpayer for a deduction.¹⁶⁵
- For purposes of determining a taxpayer's foreign expropriation loss under §1351, a worthless debt is treated as a foreign expropriation loss to the extent it is deductible under §166.¹⁶⁶

d. Deductions Used in Special Tax Liability Computations

In some instances, some or all of a taxpayer's deductions are used as an element in computing a taxpayer's tax liability under a special provision. Important examples include:

- In determining the tax liability of a child under age 18, and for tax years beginning after May 25, 2005, children age 18, who have earned income that does not exceed one-half of the amount of their support, or full-time students ages 19 through 23, who have earned income that does not exceed one-half of the amount of their support¹⁶⁷ with respect to unearned income, the child's itemized deductions directly connected with the unearned income and the child's standard deduction are subtracted from gross unearned income to determine net unearned income, which is then in effect taxed at the marginal tax rates of the child's parents under certain circumstances.¹⁶⁸
- Certain deductions are allowed in computing the tax on accumulation distributions made by trusts.¹⁶⁹
- The computation of excess distributions subject to the §1291(a) tax is adjusted to reflect any §642(c) charitable deduction by a trust.¹⁷⁰
- The net operating loss deduction is taken into account in calculating an S corporation's built-in gains tax.¹⁷¹
- Certain deductions are allowed in computing the tax on certain cooperatives.¹⁷²

3. Alternative Minimum Tax

a. In General

The alternative minimum tax (AMT) is an income tax that supplements the regular income tax.¹⁷³ Certain taxpayers are required to calculate their tax liability under both the regular income tax and the AMT, and then pay the higher amount. After the repeal of the corporate alternative minimum tax by the 2017 TCJA,¹⁷⁴ the Inflation Reduction Act¹⁷⁵ imposes a corporate alternative minimum tax equal to the excess of 15% of the corporation's adjusted financial statement income (AFSI) over its corporate AMT foreign tax credit, effective for tax years beginning after December 31, 2022. Unlike the former corporate AMT, which was based on taxable income, the post-2022 corporate AMT is based on adjusted financial statement income.¹⁷⁶ The determination of whether an amount is deductible and the manner in which the deduction is computed for AMT purposes differs in many instances from the determination for regular income tax purposes.¹⁷⁷ Rather than recomputing alternative minimum taxable income deductions separately, the IRC provides a series of adjustments and preferences that are added to, or subtracted from, taxable income to determine alternative minimum taxable income.¹⁷⁸ The adjustments and preferences relevant to deductions are described immediately below. The alternative minimum tax is discussed in detail in 587 T.M., Noncorporate Alternative Minimum Tax, and 752 T.M., Corporate Alternative Minimum Tax.

b. Adjustments

In many instances, some of a taxpayer's deductions are adjusted for AMT purposes, usually resulting in a smaller allowable deduction. Important examples of the adjustments and differing treatments include:

- Depreciation deductions are treated differently, generally resulting in a smaller deduction.¹⁷⁹
- Mining exploration and development costs are deducted through amortization deductions over a specified period, rather than as deductions in the year incurred.¹⁸⁰
- The net operating loss deduction is adjusted.¹⁸¹
- Pollution control facility costs are deducted under the alternative depreciation system of §168(g) or, for property placed in service after 1998, under the straight-line method of §168, rather than as amortization deductions under §169.¹⁸²
- Miscellaneous itemized deductions are disallowed.¹⁸³
- The itemized deduction for most taxes is disallowed.¹⁸⁴

¹⁸² §56(a)(5).

- The medical expense deduction is currently calculated in the same manner for all taxpayers.¹⁸⁵ Historically, the preferred lower AGI limit for taxpayers 65 years of age and older was lost for AMT purposes.

- The interest deduction is computed differently, generally resulting in a smaller deduction.¹⁸⁶

- The standard deduction and deduction for personal and dependency exemptions are not allowed.¹⁸⁷

- Circulation expenditures and research and experimental expenditures are deducted through amortization deductions over a specified period, rather than as deductions in the year incurred.¹⁸⁸

- Tax shelter farm activity losses are not allowed.¹⁸⁹

- Disallowed passive losses are computed differently.¹⁹⁰

c. Tax Preference Items

In other instances, certain deductions are treated as tax preference items and, thus, are redefined, allowed, disallowed, or remeasured for AMT purposes. Important examples include:

- the depletion deduction;¹⁹¹
- intangible drilling costs;¹⁹² and
- accelerated depreciation on certain property.¹⁹³

4. Other Federal Taxes

Because there are other federal taxes based on a derivative of gross income reduced by deductions, the determination of deductions is significant beyond mere income tax liability. For example, moving expense reimbursements are not subject to Federal Income Contributions Act (FICA) taxation to the extent a corresponding deduction is allowable to the employee.¹⁹⁴ However, income tax deductions and deductions allowable for some other tax liability computations are not identical.¹⁹⁵ FICA taxation is discussed in detail in 392 T.M., Withholding, Social Security and Unemployment Taxes on Compensation.

Under prior law, the disallowance also did not apply to the portion of the standard deduction that consisted of the qualified motor vehicle sales tax deduction. §56(b)(1)(D) (reference to former §63(c)(1)(E)), pursuant to which the standard deduction included the motor vehicle sales tax deduction.

5. State and Local Income Taxes

The significance of deductions as an element in the computation of tax liability extends beyond the federal income tax. Most state and local income tax liability computations include the allowance of deductions, usually based on deductions allowed for federal income tax purposes modified to reflect the tax policy decisions of a particular state.¹⁹⁶ Even in most of the few states that independently define the income tax base, the statutory provisions closely resemble some or all of the federal provisions, and federal judicial and other analysis receives significant weight in state administrative and judicial analysis of the corresponding state provision.¹⁹⁷

D. Administrative Impacts

1. Return Filing Requirements

Certain deductions are elements in determining whether a person or entity is required to file an income tax return.¹⁹⁸ For example, in the case of tax years beginning after December 31, 2017, and before January 1, 2026, an individual who is not married and whose gross income for the tax year does not exceed the standard deduction is not required to file a tax return.¹⁹⁹ Return filing requirements are discussed in detail in 623 T.M., IRS Procedures: Examinations and Appeals.

2. IRS Computation of Tax

Whether a taxpayer itemizes deductions or claims the standard deduction is a factor in determining whether the taxpayer can elect to require the IRS to compute the income tax liability.²⁰⁰

E. Constitutional Concerns

1. In General

Income tax deductions are not constitutional rights.²⁰¹ The Supreme Court specifically rejected an argument to the contrary in New Colonial Ice Co. v. Helvering.²⁰² In INDOPCO v. Commissioner,²⁰³ *Deputy v. DuPont*²⁰⁴ and Interstate Transit Lines v. Commissioner,²⁰⁵ the Supreme Court held that deductions are a matter of legislative grace.²⁰⁶ This maxim has been repeated by the lower courts many times.²⁰⁷

Note: Under the Sixteenth Amendment, Congress has the power to tax incomes, from whatever source derived, without apportionment.²⁰⁸ The Sixteenth Amendment, however, does not define the concept of incomes nor does it indicate whether unapportioned taxes may be imposed on gross income, in contrast to net income. The issue has never arisen because deductions, including trade or business deductions, have always been a significant element in the computation of taxable income. The concepts of income and gross income are discussed in detail in 501 T.M., Gross Income: Overview and Conceptual Aspects.

Congress has the discretion to provide or to not provide any deductions or any particular deduction.²⁰⁹ Thus, Congress could, if it chose, allow deductions for trade or business expenses and for no other expenditures.²¹⁰ The courts have no power to provide for a deduction for which Congress has not provided.²¹¹ Congress also has the power to terminate a deduction.²¹²

The Supreme Court has stated that Congress is not required to subsidize constitutional rights through deductions, but that it may selectively subsidize them.²¹³ Thus, Congress is not constitutionally required to provide an alternative deduction for taxpayers whose religious beliefs cause them to disagree with some of the uses to which tax revenues are put, and its failure to do so does not violate the First Amendment.²¹⁴ Similarly, the denial of deductions for personal exemptions in the computation of the AMT does not unconstitutionally infringe the free exercise rights of a taxpayer who, for religious reasons, chose to have many children.²¹⁵

Several courts have stated that there may be a constitutional right “to deduct” the cost of goods sold from gross receipts.²¹⁶

2. Limitations on Congressional Power to Enact Deductions

a. In General

The only limitation on the exercise by Congress of its discretion to provide or not provide deductions is that it not act so arbitrarily so as to create, in effect, a classification so unreasonable that it violates the Fifth Amendment.²¹⁷ Thus, a deduction is invalid only if it is arbitrary and capricious or results in a gross and patent inequality.²¹⁸ The Tax Court has held that the Equal Protection and Due Process Clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment do not affect the taxing power of the federal government.²¹⁹

b. Classification of Taxpayers for Deduction Purposes

Congress is permitted to establish classes of taxpayers who are and are not entitled to a deduction, provided that all the members of a class are treated alike.²²⁰ Thus, the denial of IRA deductions for those taxpayers who are participants in qualified plans (or for those taxpayers who are not participants, but whose spouses are active participants) does not violate the due process clauses of the Fifth Amendment.²²¹ Similarly, the denial of home office deductions for professors does not violate the Fifth Amendment equal protection clause because professors are allowed home office deductions to the same extent as other taxpayers.²²² Bringing the challenge under the Fourteenth Amendment and arguing that the denial of deductions treats home workers differently from other taxpayers is fruitless.²²³ Establishing a presumption in favor of custodial parents for purposes of the dependency exemption deduction with respect to a child of divorced parents is not a bill of attainder nor is it a violation of equal protection.²²⁴

One of the most litigated provisions in this respect was the former dependent care deduction.²²⁵ The Tax Court held that the statutory denial of the deduction for payments to the taxpayer’s relatives in exchange for dependent care services did not violate the taxpayer’s constitutional rights.²²⁶ The Tax Court also consistently held that the limitation of the deduction to women, widowers, and husbands with incapacitated wives did not violate the constitutional rights of unmarried male taxpayers who were not widowers.²²⁷ In Moritz v. Commissioner,²²⁸ the Tenth Circuit reversed the Tax Court holding that the denial of the deduction to unmarried men violated the due process clause and that the appropriate relief was to extend the provision to include those taxpayers.²²⁹ Shortly after Moritz was decided, Congress removed the restrictions that limited the deduction to women, widowers, and husbands with incapacitated wives.²³⁰ In 1976, the deduction was repealed and replaced by a credit.²³¹

The Supreme Court also held that the allowance of personal exemptions and the different treatment of married and unmarried individuals with respect to the predecessor of the standard deduction does not violate the Constitution.²³²

The Eleventh Circuit has held that denial of a deduction for in vitro fertilization-related expenses of a gestational surrogate claimed by a homosexual male taxpayer does not violate his right to equal protection of the laws because there is not fundamental right to IVF and surrogacy-assisted reproduction and no discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation where IVF expenses are not deductible by either homosexual or heterosexual taxpayers.²³³

c. Charitable Contribution Deductions

In Taxation with Representation of Wash. v. Regan,²³⁴ the District of Columbia Circuit held that denying charitable contribution deductions for contributions to an exempt organization that represents the general public on tax matters, on the grounds of excessive lobbying, while allowing deductions for charitable contributions to veterans’ organizations that lobby extensively, violates the equal protection clause of the Fifth Amendment, because there was insufficient legitimate justification for distinguishing between the organizations to justify even indirect free speech infringement.²³⁵ However, in a related case, the Supreme Court reversed and held that a rational basis for granting additional benefits to veterans' organizations existed and, thus, the equal protection clause was not violated.²³⁶ It also held that the denial of charitable contribution deductions for contributions to organizations that do substantial lobbying does not violate the contributors' rights to freedom of speech.²³⁷

Note: Since the case was decided, Congress enacted legislation extending the disallowance of lobbying expense deductions to all taxpayers.²³⁸ That decision in turn sparked challenges on constitutional grounds by other taxpayers.²³⁹

In Hernandez v. Commissioner,²⁴⁰ the Supreme Court held that the allowance of a charitable contribution deduction for contributions to specified religious organizations does not violate the establishment clause of the First Amendment.²⁴¹ The allowance of charitable contribution deductions for contributions to churches does not violate the establishment clause²⁴² or any other provision.²⁴³

3. Failure to Provide or Continue Specific Deductions

The denial of deductions for personal expenditures does not violate the Constitution.²⁴⁴ Nor is it a violation of a minister's First Amendment rights to deny a deduction for commuting expenses between home and church.²⁴⁵ No constitutional rights are violated by the denial of deductions for commuting expenses paid by a carpenter.²⁴⁶ The decision by Congress to prohibit deductions for lobbying expenses does not violate the taxpayers' First or Fifth Amendment rights.²⁴⁷

Denial of deductions for adoption expenses, even though medical expenses are deductible, is not a denial of equal protection.²⁴⁸ However, several years after the unsuccessful challenge to the constitutionality of a medical expense deduction that excluded adoption expenses, Congress enacted a deduction for adoption expenses,²⁴⁹ subsequently repealed it, and then, almost two decades after the unsuccessful challenge, enacted a limited credit for adoption expenses.²⁵⁰

The provision allowing a deduction for some or all of the cost of business tangible personal property²⁵¹ does not violate the Constitution by precluding the deduction with respect to real property, because the application of the deduction to personal property is a reasonable classification.²⁵²

The Tax Court has rejected constitutional arguments against the denial of deductions for social security taxes paid by an employee.²⁵³ It is not unconstitutional to deny deductions for compensation paid to employees in excess of compensation permitted by other laws.²⁵⁴

Denying deductions for losses of anticipated earnings and allowing deductions for losses of existing capital is a reasonable distinction that does not violate the Constitution.²⁵⁵ Nor is the disallowance of "cost of living" deductions a violation of the taxpayer's constitutional rights.²⁵⁶

4. Imposition of Limitations or Restrictions on Deductions

a. In General

Congress may place limitations on deductions, provided the limitations do not go beyond the permissible Constitutional power described in I.E.2., above. It is within Congress's power to deny the deduction in its entirety.²⁵⁷ Thus, application of the former §68 limitation on itemized deductions discussed in V.C.8.j.(2), below, to deductions for state and local taxes does not violate the Sixteenth Amendment or the Tenth Amendment, and limitations under §162(l) and §163(h), does not reflect an unconstitutional delegation of the taxing power to private entities such as employers and mortgage lenders.²⁵⁸ Similarly, the substantiation requirements and limitations in §274 do not violate the Fifth, Thirteenth, or Fourteenth Amendments, nor do they impinge on a taxpayer's civil rights or freedom of travel.²⁵⁹

b. Requirement that Deductions Be Substantiated

The denial of medical expense deductions and state and local income tax deductions not substantiated by the taxpayer does not unconstitutionally favor one economic group over another.²⁶⁰ Requiring a taxpayer who is an author to substantiate deductions for the expenses of writing does not constitute a prior restraint in violation of the taxpayer's First Amendment rights, because the substantiation requirements are imposed under statutes of general applicability that further substantial public interests.²⁶¹ Imposing on taxpayers the obligation to provide a social security number for dependents with respect to whom dependency exemption deductions are claimed, a requirement designed to assist the IRS in identifying inappropriate deductions, does not violate that taxpayer's constitutional right to free exercise of religion nor does it violate their Religious Freedom Restoration Act.²⁶²

c. Requirement that There Be a Reduction in Wealth

It is not a violation of due process to deny deductions for expenditures for which the taxpayer receives reimbursement.²⁶³ For example, the denial of charitable contribution deductions for taxpayers who receive consideration for their transfers to the charitable organization does not violate the taxpayers' rights of freedom of religion or equal protection.²⁶⁴

d. Imposition of Conditions Precedent to Deduction

Allowing a charitable contribution deduction only for transfers to qualified charitable donees does not prevent the taxpayer from engaging in the constitutionally protected activity of belonging to an organization that is not a qualified donee, merely because the taxpayer must fund the activities entirely with after-tax income.²⁶⁵ Limitations on the personal exemption deduction do not force the taxpayer into involuntary servitude,²⁶⁶ and the presumption favoring the custodial parent with the dependency deduction for a child whose parents are divorced does not violate the uniformity clause,²⁶⁷ is not an unconstitutional irrebuttable presumption,²⁶⁸ is not a bill of attainder,²⁶⁹ does not violate equal protection,²⁷⁰ and does not violate due process.²⁷¹ Congress may allow deductions only for expenses relating to taxable income, and thus the §265(a)(2) limitation precluding interest deductions with respect to indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry tax-exempt obligations does not violate the Constitution.²⁷² Similarly, limiting the §274 deduction for travel, entertainment, and similar expenses does not violate the taxpayer's civil rights, freedom of travel right, or Fifth, Thirteenth, or Fourteenth Amendment rights.²⁷³

Also, Congress can set the condition that a taxpayer must be currently married to take a personal exemption deduction for a spouse.²⁷⁴ The denial is not a violation of the Fifth Amendment because it is not arbitrary or capricious to deny a dependency exemption deduction for a taxpayer's former spouse in the year of divorce.²⁷⁵

e. Restrictions Related to Timing

Congress may impose timing restrictions, and so the use of an annual, rather than transactional, basis for income taxation is not constitutionally arbitrary.²⁷⁶

II. Applicable Principles

A. Introduction

As the tax law evolved, certain general principles developed that apply to deductions generally. One significant concept, discussed in II.B., below, is that of the tax benefit rule. Another, discussed in II.C., below, is that an expenditure or similar outlay generally is required. In II.D., below, the impact of reimbursement is discussed. Another principle is that a deduction must be properly substantiated, as discussed in II.E., below. Finally, the timing principle of deductions is discussed in II.F., below.

B. Tax Benefit Rule

Generally, the tax benefit rule provides that the amount of an expense recovered shall be included in income in the year of recovery to the extent the expense resulted in a tax benefit to the taxpayer.²⁷⁷ Conversely, if the taxpayer did not receive a tax benefit when the expense was paid, then the taxpayer does not have to include an amount in income when the expense is later recovered. The tax benefit rule is substantially judicial in origin and nature, but has been codified, in part, in §111. Under the tax benefit rule, the recovery of a previously paid expense must be included in income if four requirements are met:

- (1) The amount was deducted in a year prior to the current year, (2) the deduction resulted in a tax benefit, (3) an event occurs in the current year that is fundamentally inconsistent with the premises on which the deduction was originally based, and (4) a nonrecognition provision of the Internal Revenue Code does not prevent the inclusion in gross income. A current event is considered fundamentally inconsistent with the premises on which the deduction was originally based when the current event would have foreclosed the deduction if that event had occurred within the year that the deduction was taken.²⁷⁸

Thus, for example, if a taxpayer deducted state income tax in the prior tax year (thus, receiving a tax benefit), then the taxpayer must include any state income tax refund as income in the year of recovery that provided the tax benefit.²⁷⁹ However, if the taxpayer had state income tax expenses in a previous tax year, but did not deduct the expenses, then the taxpayer does not have to include the subsequent state income tax refund in income.

Example: A single taxpayer, S, pays state income tax of $5,000 in the previous tax year and claimed itemized deductions totaling $25,000. In the current year, S receives a state income tax refund for the previous tax year in the amount of $2,000. When the $2,000 state income tax refund was deducted in the previous year, S received a tax benefit as a result of the deduction. Furthermore, if S would have paid $5,000 in state income taxes in the previous year, but also had been refunded the $2,000 dollars in the same year, S would have only been allowed a deduction of $3,000 for state income taxes paid. Additionally, there is not a nonrecognition provision preventing the inclusion in gross income. Thus, S must include the $2,000 in income in the current year.

Example: A single taxpayer, T, pays state income tax of $5,000 in the previous tax year and claimed itemized deductions totaling $6,500. In the current year, T receives a state income tax refund for the previous tax year in the amount of $2,000. When the $2,000 state income tax refund was deducted in the previous year, T received a tax benefit as a result of the deduction. Furthermore, if T would have paid $5,000 in state income taxes in the previous year, but also had been refunded the $2,000 dollars in the same year, T would have only been allowed a deduction of $3,000 for state income taxes paid. Also, there is not a nonrecognition provision preventing the inclusion in gross income. Thus, T must include in income the amount of the $2,000 state income tax recovered that resulted in a tax benefit in the previous year to T. Here, if T would have only been allowed to deduct $3,000 for state income tax paid, T's total itemized deductions would have been $4,500 resulting in T claiming the standard deduction (in 2016, $6,300 for singles) instead of itemizing his deductions. As a result, the tax benefit to T for deducting the $2,000 state income tax recovered was only $200 ($6,500 – $6,300); and, T must only include $200 in income in the current year.

Example: If a single taxpayer, R, pays state income tax of $5,000 in the previous tax year, but did not itemize deductions, because R's total itemized deductions did not exceed the standard deduction amount, then R did not receive a tax benefit for the state income tax expense. Thus, if R receives a state income tax refund for the previous tax year, R does not have to include the amount in income.

A more detailed discussion on the tax benefit rule is provided in 502 T.M., Gross Income: Tax Benefit, Claim of Right and Assignment of Income.

C. Expenditure or Outlay

1. In General

Generally, a deduction represents a decrease in the taxpayer's economic wealth that is allowable in computing taxable income. Thus, in Block v. Commissioner,²⁸⁰ the Tax Court disallowed a deduction to a law firm that placed funds in escrow to protect a client against possible third-party claims arising from the firm's erroneous advice, because the firm intended to retrieve the funds after the statute of limitations expired with respect to the third-party claims.²⁸¹

2. Economic Wealth

a. Anticipated but Unrealized Income

No deduction is allowable with respect to income that the taxpayer anticipates, but does not realize.²⁸² In Hort v. Commissioner,²⁸³ the Supreme Court held that no deduction was allowed for the difference between rent that a landlord would have received under a canceled lease and the amount paid by the tenant for having canceled the lease.²⁸⁴ The Court reasoned that, because the unrealized rent was not includible in the taxpayer's gross income, the taxpayer had no grounds for a deduction.²⁸⁵

This principle applies to every type of income, including lost wages,²⁸⁶ lost interest,²⁸⁷ uncollected receivables,²⁸⁸ uncollected business income,²⁸⁹ uncollected condemnation proceeds,²⁹⁰ unrealized anticipated investment profits,²⁹¹ lost rents,²⁹² and lost royalties.²⁹³ Thus, no deduction is allowed for the difference between the amount realized by the taxpayer from the sale of property and greater amounts received by others from the sale of similar property.²⁹⁴

It does not matter that the income is not realized because of injury or illness,²⁹⁵ unemployment,²⁹⁶ employment termination due to criminal charges,²⁹⁷ criminal conviction,²⁹⁸ employment for fewer than the maximum possible hours,²⁹⁹ loss of tools of the trade,³⁰⁰ forfeiture of equipment,³⁰¹ employment in a lower-paying position than the one previously held,³⁰² devotion of time to other matters,³⁰³ damage to property,³⁰⁴ another person's breach of contract,³⁰⁵ cancellation of contracts,³⁰⁶ or another person's bankruptcy.³⁰⁷ Similarly, no deduction is allowed for anticipated but unrealized rents, regardless of whether the cause is cancellation of a lease,³⁰⁸ damage to the rental property,³⁰⁹ or deterioration of the rental property.³¹⁰ No deduction is allowed for income not realized because the contingency on which it is based does not occur.³¹¹

In contrast, if the taxpayer does not receive income already included in gross income under the taxpayer's method of accounting, then a loss deduction is not precluded by the principle disallowing deductions for anticipated but unrealized income.³¹² The rationale is that the taxpayer who includes an amount in gross income before it is collected acquires basis in that collectible, and the nonpayment of the collectible is tantamount to the taxpayer's relinquishment of the economic value reflected in that basis.³¹³

b. Uncompensated Services

In O'Connor v. Commissioner,³¹⁴ the Tax Court held that a taxpayer was not allowed to deduct the value of services rendered to an organization on a voluntary, uncompensated basis, because there was no income from the activity.³¹⁵ A deduction is also not allowed for services performed if the taxpayer issues a check to an employee, but does not have the funds to properly pay the check.³¹⁶ Similarly, no deduction is allowed for the value of uncompensated services performed by taxpayer for others even if the impact is not unlike that procured through spending money on advertising.³¹⁷ Furthermore, no deduction is allowed for the difference between what a taxpayer is paid and what a taxpayer believes his or her services are worth.³¹⁸ The arm's-length employment agreement establishes the value of the services.³¹⁹

Similarly, taxpayers are not allowed to deduct the value of services that they render to themselves, because individuals are not required to include in income the value of services they provide to themselves.³²⁰ This concept of excluding imputed income from gross income is discussed in detail in 501 T.M., Gross Income: Overview and Conceptual Aspects.

c. Unrented Property

No deduction is allowed for the amount of rent a taxpayer would receive from renting property to others that is not received, because the taxpayer does not attempt to rent the property.³²¹ The rationale of denying a deduction for the rental value of unrented property reflects the fact that the taxpayers are not required to include in gross income the value of their own property that they use themselves.³²² This concept of excluding imputed rental income from gross income is discussed in detail in 501 T.M., Gross Income: Overview and Conceptual Aspects.

D. Reimbursement

1. Effect on Deduction

a. In General

Generally, the impact of reimbursement on the allowance of a deduction depends on whether the reimbursement is includible in gross income. For reporting purposes, the IRS allows employees to report reimbursements net of deductible employee business expenses or deductible employee business expenses net of reimbursements.³²³ These special rules are discussed in detail in 519 T.M., Travel, Transportation, Entertainment, Meal, and Gift Expenses.

b. Reimbursement Includible in Gross Income

If a reimbursement is includible in gross income, the expenditure is deductible to the extent it satisfies the conditions of a particular deduction provision.³²⁴ For example, deductible reforestation expenditures exclude reimbursed amounts unless the reimbursement has been included in gross income.³²⁵ Similarly, §597 disallows banks and domestic savings and loan associations a deduction effectively reimbursed by nontaxable federal financial assistance.³²⁶

Note: The fact that an expenditure is reimbursed and the reimbursement is included in gross income does not necessarily mean that the expenditure is deductible. The expenditure must still satisfy the conditions of a specific provision allowing a deduction. Thus, for example, a taxpayer who receives reimbursement for all moving expenses that are incurred must include the entire reimbursement in gross income, even if some of the moving expenses are not deductible under §217. Moving expenses are discussed in 594 T.M., Tax Implications of Home Ownership.

Observation: If the expenditure is not deductible because it must be capitalized, any reimbursement reduces the amount that is capitalized and, thus, reduces any ensuing depreciation, depletion, or amortization deduction.³²⁷

The extent to which reimbursements are included in gross income is discussed in 501 T.M., Gross Income: Overview and Conceptual Aspects.

c. Reimbursement Not Includible in Gross Income

If the reimbursement is not includible in gross income, generally it reduces the amount of the deduction, because, to the extent of the reimbursement, the taxpayer has not made an expenditure or outlay.³²⁸ This principle has been applied, for example, to otherwise deductible educational expenses,³²⁹ costs of moving business property,³³⁰ and rent expenses.³³¹

2. Failure to Seek Reimbursement

a. In General

If the taxpayer has a right to reimbursement, but does not seek it, the deduction is disallowed to the extent of the reimbursement to which the taxpayer is entitled.³³² In some instances, the disallowance is based on the ground that it is not ordinary and necessary to incur an expenditure that another person is obligated to bear.³³³ In other instances, the deduction has been disallowed on the ground that it is not reasonable to incur an expenditure payable by another.³³⁴ In a third approach, the disallowance is based on a specific statutory provision.³³⁵ A fourth justification rests on the fact that the taxpayer could have avoided the expenditure by accepting in kind assistance from the other party.³³⁶ It does not matter that the taxpayer fails to seek reimbursement through error,³³⁷ through failure to submit the reimbursement claim before the employer's deadline,³³⁸ failure to maintain records,³³⁹ or recordkeeping complexities,³⁴⁰ because of the other party's precarious financial condition,³⁴¹ or because the other party is unable to pay.³⁴²

b. Business Purpose Exception

If a taxpayer has a business purpose for not seeking reimbursement, the deduction may not be denied. For example, if there is a compelling business reason not to seek reimbursement for repairs to business property, the deduction is not necessarily denied.³⁴³ Also, if waiver of the right to reimbursement is a condition of the taxpayer's employment, the failure to seek reimbursement does not reduce the amount otherwise deductible.³⁴⁴ Nonetheless, a change in the employment contract made long after the expenditures are paid by the employee is disregarded, particularly if the employee is employed by a wholly owned corporation.³⁴⁵ However, if the employee does not seek reimbursement because the corporation's reimbursement policy is unclear, there is doubt that there would be reimbursement, and the employee's relationship with the corporation is discordant, the deduction is not reduced.³⁴⁶ Similarly, if the employer limits the reimbursement, the amount not reimbursed is not treated as voluntarily relinquished by the taxpayer and does not reduce the amount otherwise deductible.³⁴⁷

3. Indeterminable Right to Reimbursement

If the taxpayer does not have a reasonable prospect of reimbursement at the time the deduction is claimed, the fact that reimbursement subsequently is received does not make the deduction erroneous.³⁴⁸ Instead, the taxpayer includes the reimbursement in gross income in the year received to the extent required to do so under the tax benefit doctrine, discussed at II.B., above. In other words, if the deduction generated a tax benefit, the reimbursement is included in gross income to the extent of the tax benefit.³⁴⁹ The tax benefit doctrine is discussed in 502 T.M., Gross Income: Tax Benefit, Claim of Right and Assignment of Income. In contrast, if the right to reimbursement is fixed, the fact that it has not yet been received by the taxpayer does not matter.³⁵⁰

E. Substantiation

1. In General

Generally, a deduction is not allowed unless, in addition to all of the other requirements, the taxpayer substantiates the expense.³⁵¹ In Harrell v. Tomlinson,³⁵² the Florida district court, citing the Supreme Court's analysis in Welch v. Helvering,³⁵³ stated, "[i]t is likewise important for a taxpayer claiming deductions to be in a position to establish proof of the correctness of the claimed amounts because the Commissioner's determination has the presumption of correctness and taxpayer has the burden of proving it to be wrong."³⁵⁴

Note: Special substantiation rules apply with respect to employee business expenses.³⁵⁵ These rules are discussed in 519 T.M., Travel, Transportation, Entertainment, Meal, and Gift Expenses. Special substantiation rules also apply with respect to certain charitable contributions.³⁵⁶ These rules are described in 521 T.M., Charitable Contributions: Income Tax Aspects.

Comment: Typically, the IRS has three years from the date a taxpayer files a return to audit and assess additional taxes.³⁵⁷ However, in the case of a 25% omission of gross income, the IRS has six years from the date a return is filed to audit and assess additional taxes.³⁵⁸ Finally, in the case of a fraudulent return, the IRS has an indefinite period to audit and assess additional taxes.³⁵⁹ Thus, a taxpayer should retain records to substantiate his deductions for at least three years, and, longer if any of the exceptions to the three year rule may apply. The statute of limitations on assessment by the IRS is discussed in 627 T.M., Limitations Periods, Interest on Underpayments and Overpayments, and Mitigation.

Note: Generally, a return filed prior to its due date (without extensions) is deemed filed on the due date,³⁶⁰ and a return filed after the due date is deemed filed upon receipt by the IRS.³⁶¹ The filing date of a return is discussed in 627 T.M., Limita-

2. Strict Substantiation Requirements

If a deduction is one to which the §274(d) strict substantiation requirements apply,³⁶² the deduction is not allowed unless the taxpayer establishes certain information by adequate records or by sufficient evidence corroborating the taxpayer's own statement.³⁶³ The required information includes:

- the amount of the item,³⁶⁴
- the time and place the travel item occurred, or the date and description of the gift,³⁶⁵
- the business purpose of the item,³⁶⁶ and
- the business relationship to the taxpayer of the recipient of the benefit.³⁶⁷

The §274(d) substantiation requirements are discussed in 519 T.M., Travel, Transportation, Entertainment, Meal, and Gift Expenses.

The §274(d) substantiation requirements apply to traveling expenses, entertainment items, business gifts, and expenses with respect to §280F(d)(4) listed property.³⁶⁸ For tax years beginning before January 1, 2018, the §274(d) substantiation requirements applies to entertainment items.³⁶⁹ However, for tax years beginning after December 31, 2017, deductions for entertainment expenses are disallowed.³⁷⁰ An entertainment item is any item with respect to an activity of a type generally considered to constitute entertainment, amusement, or recreation,³⁷¹ or any item with respect to a facility used in connection with an entertainment activity.³⁷² Generally, listed property is:

- any passenger automobile,³⁷³
- any other property used as a means of transportation,³⁷⁴
- any property of a type generally used for purposes of entertainment, recreation, or amusement,³⁷⁵

³⁶² §274(d). The TCJA amended §274 to reflect new limitations on deductions by employers of expenses for fringe benefits. For example, deduction for entertainment expenses, qualified transportation fringe benefits, and transportation and commuter benefits are eliminated, effective for tax years beginning after December 31, 2017. The deduction for meals provided at the convenience of the employer is eliminated for expenses paid or incurred after December 31, 2025. Substantiation requirements in §274(d) have been modified to reflect these changes, including repealing §274(d)(2) and redesignation of the listed property substantiation requirement §274(d)(4) as §274(d)(3).

³⁶³ §274(d); Reg. §1.274-5T. The TCJA amended the substantiation requirements in §274(d) to reflect changes made to §274, including repealing §274(d)(2) and redesignation of the listed property substantiation requirement §274(d)(4) as §274(d)(3).

- any computer or peripheral equipment (for tax years beginning before January 1, 2018),³⁷⁶
- any other property of a type specified by the IRS in regulations.³⁷⁷

Listed property is discussed in 519 T.M., Travel, Transportation, Entertainment, Meal, and Gift Expenses.

3. Less Strict Substantiation Requirements

If the §274(d) substantiation requirements do not apply, the courts have permitted taxpayers to prove the existence and amount of an expenditure not only through documentary evidence³⁷⁸ and third-party testimony³⁷⁹ but also through the taxpayer's testimony.³⁸⁰ The question is ultimately one of fact.³⁸¹ In some instances, deductions have been allowed even though no records were produced and the taxpayer's testimony was unconvincing and unsatisfactory.³⁸² In other instances, deductions have been disallowed because the court ruled as inadmissible the only documentation or testimony that would establish the taxpayer's claims.³⁸³

However, in the absence of complete or exact records, the courts have permitted the approximation of the amount, but not the fact of the taxpayer's expenditure.³⁸⁴ In the leading decision, Cohan v. Commissioner,³⁸⁵ the Second Circuit held that absolute certainty is not necessary because it often is impossible, but that as close an approximation as is possible suffices.³⁸⁶ The Supreme Court has added that the record must at least establish the possibility of approximating the amount³⁸⁷ and provide a method for doing so.³⁸⁸ Thus, if the taxpayer fails to present any evidence from which the court can make an estimate, the taxpayer's claimed deduction cannot be upheld.³⁸⁹

³⁷⁶ Former §280F(d)(4)(A)(iv) (reference to §168(i)(2)(B)). See Reg. §1.280F-6(b)(1)(iv). The TCJA amended §280F(d)(4) to remove computer or peripheral equipment from listed property, effective for property placed in service in tax years ending after December 31, 2017.

F. Timing

1. In General

Timing also plays an important role in the analysis of a deduction. Once a taxpayer determines that an item is allowable as a deduction, the tax year in which the deduction is allowable must also be determined.³⁹⁰ Thus, the determination of the taxpayer's deductions involves not only whether an item is deductible, but when the item is deductible.

Generally, the timing rules are dependent on the taxpayer's method of accounting.³⁹¹ While there are many methods of accounting, the vast majority of taxpayers use only a few methods.³⁹² An allowable deduction is taken for the tax year that is the proper tax year under the method of accounting used in computing the taxpayer's taxable income.³⁹³ The method of accounting used for tax purposes is the same method the taxpayer regularly uses to compute income in keeping the books.³⁹⁴ If there is no regularly used book method, or if the method used does not clearly reflect income, the taxpayer must use the method the IRS prescribes.³⁹⁵ Subject to those general principles, taxpayers are permitted to use the cash method, the accrual method, any other method permitted by statute, or any combination of these methods the IRS permits.³⁹⁶ Special exceptions exist for amounts accrued by reason of the death of an accrual-method taxpayer,³⁹⁷ real property taxes incurred by accrual-method taxpayers,³⁹⁸ dividends and interest paid by specified financial institutions on certain deposits and similar amounts,³⁹⁹ contested liabilities,⁴⁰⁰ and certain prepaid interest.⁴⁰¹ Special rules, generally making acceleration unavailable, are provided for tax shelters.⁴⁰² There is a limitation on excess farm losses by noncorporate taxpayers who receive an applicable subsidy.⁴⁰³ However, for tax years beginning after 2017, the limitation on excess farm losses does not apply.⁴⁰⁴ In addition, for tax years beginning after 2020, excess business losses are not allowed.⁴⁰⁵

Comment: Timing affects not only the allowance of deductions, but also the recognition of gross income. For most taxpayers, it is advantageous to defer the recognition of income. Conversely, one of the principal consequences of timing determinations is the availability of acceleration; for most taxpayers it is advantageous to accelerate the deduction of an item to the earliest tax year permitted under the tax law. Some of the timing rules involve elections by the taxpayer that control, to a limited extent, the tax year of the deduction.⁴⁰⁶ Although acceleration generally is beneficial, not all taxpayers in every situation benefit from the acceleration of a deduction, so careful analysis must be made before a taxpayer makes an election that affects timing and acceleration.

The deduction timing rules, including the special rules, are discussed in detail in 525 T.M., State, Local, and Federal Taxes; 536 T.M., Interest Expense Deductions; 565 T.M., Installment Sales; 570 T.M., Accounting Methods — General Principles; 572 T.M., Accounting Methods — Adoption and Changes; 576 T.M., Uniform Capitalization Rules: Inventory; Self-Constructed Assets; Real Estate; 577 T.M., Uniform Capitalization Rules: Method Change Rules and Special Topics; 578 T.M., Inventories: General Principles; LIFO Method; and 608 T.M., Reporting Farm Income.

2. Other Factors

There are other factors that must be considered in determining the tax year in which the deduction is allowable, including generally applicable exceptions, listed in II.F.2.a., below, specially applicable exceptions, listed in II.F.2.b., below, and capital expenditures, listed in II.F.2.c., below.

a. Generally Applicable Exceptions

The following exceptions are generally applicable to deductions, which should be considered in determining the tax year in which the deduction is allowable:

- The §465 at-risk limitation⁴⁰⁷ discussed in detail in 550 T.M., At-Risk Rules; and
- The §469 passive loss limitation⁴⁰⁸ discussed in detail in 549 T.M., Passive Loss Rules.

b. Specifically Applicable Exceptions

The following exceptions are specifically applicable to deductions, which should be considered, as applicable, in determining the tax year in which the deduction is allowable:

³⁹⁰ See generally §451.

³⁹¹ E.g., §451(a).

³⁹² See §446(c).

³⁹⁶ §446(c). Under the cash method of accounting, transactions are taken into account when cash or its equivalent is actually or constructively received and when cash or its equivalent is paid. Under the accrual method of accounting, transactions are taken into account when all events have occurred that fix, with reasonable certainty, the taxpayer's rights or obligations with respect to the transaction. In addition, for the deduction of certain expenses, economic performance of the transaction must have occurred. See Poswolsky, The Line Between the Cash and Accrual Methods Has Narrowed, but the Choices Remain Important, 44 Tax'n for Acct. 210 (1990). The restrictions on the choice of methods of accounting and their selection are discussed in detail in 570 T.M., Accounting Methods — General Principles, 565 T.M., Installment Sales, and 572 T.M., Accounting Methods — Adoption and Changes.

⁴⁰⁶ See, e.g., §461(c), §468(a), §468A(a).

⁴⁰⁷ §465(a)(1), §465(a)(2). A taxpayer's loss arising from an applicable activity during a tax year is deductible in that tax year only to the extent of the taxpayer's aggregate amount at-risk for the activity as of the end of the tax year; the excess is treated as a potential deduction in the succeeding tax year.

⁴⁰⁸ §469(a)(1), §469(b). See Reg. §1.469-1T(f). The passive activity losses incurred by covered taxpayers in a tax year are deductible in that tax year only to the extent of the aggregate income from passive activities for that tax year; the excess is treated as a potential deduction in the succeeding tax year.

- The §451(g)(3) deferral rule for frozen deposits in certain financial institutions⁴¹⁴ discussed in 570 T.M., Accounting Methods — General Principles.

c. Capital Expenditures

(1) In General

Under §263(a), no deduction is allowed for amounts that must be properly charged to a capital account.⁴¹⁵ Despite the descriptive nature of the statutory, judicial, and regulatory tests, the actual determination of whether an amount is a capital expenditure depends on the circumstances of each particular case.⁴¹⁶ The analysis of specific transactions is discussed in 509 T.M., Principles of Capitalization. The impact of the capitalization requirement on specific types of trade or business or for-profit activity deductions, such as insurance, advertising, relocation expenses, supplies, education, professional expenses, dues, professional service fees, depositors' guaranty fund set asides, or governmental impositions, is discussed in 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions. Whether a capitalized amount can generate a depreciation, amortization, or depletion deduction is discussed in 531 T.M., Depreciation: MACRS and ACRS, 532 T.M., First-Year Expensing and Additional Depreciation, 533 T.M., Amortization of Intangibles, and 601 T.M., Mineral Properties — Exploration, Acquisition, Development and Disposition.

(2) Exceptions

(a) Deduction for Tax Year Paid or Incurred

Under certain provisions of the IRC, taxpayers may elect to treat capital expenditures as deductible expenses or deferred expenses, or to treat deductible expenses as capital expenditures.⁴¹⁷ This exception applies to the following expenditures:

- Circulation expenditures to the extent deductible under §173, discussed in detail in 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions.
- Research and development expenditures to the extent deductible under §174A, discussed in detail in 556 T.M., Research and Development Expenditures.⁴¹⁸
- Soil and water conservation expenditures to the extent deductible under §175, discussed in detail in 607 T.M., Farm and Ranch Expenses and Credits.⁴¹⁹
- Certain asset expensing to the extent deductible under §179, discussed in detail in 532 T.M., First-Year Expensing and Additional Depreciation.⁴²⁰
- Expenditures for qualified clean-fuel vehicle property and qualified clean-fuel vehicle refueling property to the extent deductible under former §179A, discussed in detail

⁴⁰⁹ §464(a) (reference to §464(d) (providing that certain prepaid farming expenses paid by covered taxpayers for feed, seed, fertilizer, or similar supplies or for poultry are allowed only for the later of the tax year in which the supplies are actually used or consumed or the tax year for which the deduction is allowable if §464 were disregarded)).

⁴¹⁰ See §421(b), §422(a)(1), §423(a)(1). Under §421(b), if an employer corporation is entitled to deduct compensation on account of a transfer of stock to an employee pursuant to the exercise of a stock option that fails to qualify for gross income exclusion treatment by the employee because the employee fails to hold the stock for the requisite holding period, then the employer corporation's deduction is allowable in the tax year in which the employee disposes of the stock and not in the tax year in which the exercise of the option occurs.

⁴¹¹ §468(a), §468(d). The taxpayer may elect to deduct the amount the taxpayer would be required to pay for qualified reclamation costs and for qualified closing costs if the reclamation or closing activities were performed currently, rather than waiting until the tax year in which economic performance occurs.

⁴¹³ §468B(a); Reg. §1.468B-3(c). Qualified payments to a designated settlement fund are deemed to satisfy the economic performance requirement for deduction by accrual method taxpayers even though economic performance otherwise has not yet occurred. See also §468B(d)(1) (defining a qualified payment as "any money or property transferred to a designated settlement fund pursuant to a court order, other than amounts which may be transferred from the fund to the taxpayer (or any related person) and other than the transfer of any stock or indebtedness of the taxpayer (or any related person)").

⁴¹⁵ §263(a). See Reg. §1.212-1(n). In some situations, a facts-and-circumstances analysis may be necessary to determine whether or not an item must be capitalized. See, e.g., CCA 201036009 (Chief Counsel's Office rejected taxpayer's argument that payments on certain liabilities assumed in connection with purchase of assets from seller undergoing bankruptcy proceedings should fall under "bright-line" rule precluding capitalization; fact-and-circumstances analysis of such liabilities is necessary to determine whether capitalization is required).

The final regulations issued under T.D. 9636, generally applicable to tax years beginning on or after January 1, 2014, replaced and removed temporary regulations issued in T.D. 9564. Taxpayers generally may elect to apply the final regulations to tax years beginning on or after January 1, 2012, or may elect to apply the temporary regulations to tax years beginning on or after January 1, 2012, and before January 1, 2014.

or incurred, is deductible over a period of tax years.⁴³⁹ In these situations, technically the deduction is not disallowed, but is merely deferred from the tax year in which it is paid or incurred to one or more subsequent tax years.

The expenditures to which the deferral exception applies are those to which the following deductions apply:

- Accelerated cost recovery deductions under §168, discussed in detail in 531 T.M., Depreciation: MACRS and ACRS and 532 T.M., First-Year Expensing and Additional Depreciation.

G. Deductions Passed Through to Another

1. In General

A taxpayer can incur deductions not only from the taxpayer's direct activities and transactions, but also from the taxpayer's membership in a pass-through entity⁴⁴¹ or relationship to an individual or entity. In some instances, net amounts are included in the taxpayer's taxable income, so the deductions passed through are taken into account by the taxpayer. In several instances, the net amounts are included in the taxpayer's gross income, but as a practical matter the taxpayer is given the benefit of the deductions.

⁴³⁹ E.g., §167, §168, §195, §248, §611, §613, §709.

⁴⁴⁰ See also §197.

⁴⁴¹ See, e.g., §671, §691, §702(a), §1366(a), §1398. See also §199A (providing a deduction for qualified business income of pass-through entities). For a detailed description of qualified business income, see 537 T.M., Qualified Business Income Deduction: Section 199A.

2. Pass-Through Entities

Typically, pass-through entities are not subject to income tax; and, instead, the owners are directly taxed on the income. For example, a partnership is a pass-through entity. The partnership does not pay income taxes.⁴⁴² Instead, the profits and losses from the partnership flow through to the individual partners based on the partner's distributive share.⁴⁴³ Pass-through entities include:

- Partnerships (which, generally, included Limited Liability Companies), discussed in detail in 712 T.M., Partnerships — Taxable Income; Allocation of Distributive Shares; Capital Accounts.
- S corporation,⁴⁴⁴ discussed in detail in 731 T.M., S Corporations: Corporate Tax Issues.

Additionally, in certain situations, foreign corporations are treated as pass-through entities with respect to their U.S. shareholders. These situations are as follows:

- Controlled foreign corporations,⁴⁴⁵ discussed in detail in 6200 T.M., CFCs — General Overview, 6220 T.M., CFCs — Foreign Personal Holding Company Income, 928 T.M., CFCs — Foreign Base Company Income (Other Than FPHCI), 6260 T.M., CFCs — Investment of Earnings in United States Property, and 6280 T.M., CFCs — Sections 959–965 and 1248 (each of which is in the Foreign Income Series).
- Domestic international sales corporations,⁴⁴⁶ discussed in detail in 6640 T.M., The Allocation and Apportionment of Deductions (Foreign Income Series).
- Qualified electing funds,⁴⁴⁷ discussed in detail in 6300 T.M., PFICs (Foreign Income Series).

3. Pass-Through Relationships

Additionally, in certain instances, deductions from a trust, an estate, or a decedent can be passed through to other taxpayers. Some important situations are as follows:

- Estate or trust deductions to beneficiaries through the inclusion of estate and trust income in the beneficiaries' gross income from their interest in an estate or trust,⁴⁴⁸ discussed in 860 T.M., Revocable Inter Vivos Trusts (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series), and 856 T.M., Subchapter J — Throwback Rules (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).
- Owners of grantor trusts and the deduction by them of the trust's expenses, and the taxation of foreign trusts with U.S. beneficiaries and the deduction of those trust's expenses by persons making transfers to those trusts, discussed in detail in 819 T.M., Grantor Trusts (Sections 671–679) (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

- The allowance of unused loss carryovers and excess deductions to beneficiaries on the termination of an estate or trust, discussed in detail in 852 T.M., Income Taxation of Trusts and Estates (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

- The deductions of bankrupts and their estates, and the tax consequences of bankruptcy, discussed in detail in 540 T.M., Bankruptcy and Insolvency Restructurings; Discharge of Indebtedness.

- A taxpayer is allowed to deduct the taxpayer's share of deductions in respect of a decedent (DRD),⁴⁴⁹ discussed at V.C.4.h., below, and in detail in 862 T.M., Income in Respect of a Decedent (Section 691) (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

III. Taxpayer Entitled to Deduction

A. Introduction

The determination of which taxpayer is entitled to claim a deduction has been discussed in numerous cases and is the subject of many statutory provisions; yet, it has never evolved into an “assignment of deductions” doctrine analogous to the assignment of income doctrine.⁴⁵⁰ The assignment of income doctrine is discussed in detail in 502 T.M., Gross Income: Tax Benefit, Claim of Right and Assignment of Income.

Generally, deductions attributable to property are allowable to the taxpayer who owns the property.⁴⁵¹ Further, deductions attributable to expenditures are generally allowable to the taxpayer who bears the economic burdens and receives the benefits of the expenditures.⁴⁵² The application of these general principles to specific situations is discussed in III.B., below.

Under §269, §269A, §482, and §845, the IRS has the power to disallow a deduction to one taxpayer and allow it to another taxpayer if the reallocation is determined by the IRS to be necessary to prevent the evasion or avoidance of federal income tax by securing the benefit of the deduction. Additionally, many statutory provisions have been enacted to resolve the question of which taxpayer is entitled to claim the deductions arising from a specific transaction. These are discussed in III.C., below.

B. Nonstatutory Principles

1. In General

The case law that addresses the issue of which taxpayer is allowed to claim a deduction is a mosaic of relatively few opinions scattered across a wide range of deductions. When compared with the numerous opinions with respect to the assignment of income doctrine, several basic principles have emerged that provide some guidance.

Generally, no deduction is allowed for the voluntary payment of another person’s expenses even if the expense would be allowable as a deduction had it been the taxpayer’s own obligation.⁴⁵³ The taxpayer must be legally obligated to pay or incur the other person’s expense.⁴⁵⁴ It does not matter if the payment is made to satisfy a moral obligation⁴⁵⁵ or because it is expedient to do so.⁴⁵⁶ However, in Reade Mfg. Co. v. United States,⁴⁵⁷ the Third Circuit suggested that a corporation that paid a partnership’s tort liability would have been allowed to deduct the payment had there been sufficient moral compulsion.⁴⁵⁸

Observation: In the context of trade or business deductions, some courts have treated the lack of legal obligation to make any payment, whether of the taxpayer’s own expenses or of another person’s expenses, as automatically precluding satisfaction of the ordinary and necessary requirement.⁴⁵⁹ Other courts, though, permit a showing that a legal obligation would have been imposed on the taxpayer had the payment not been made or that such a payment is customary in the taxpayer’s trade or business. The issue of voluntariness in the context of “ordinary and necessary” is discussed in detail in 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions.

Generally, no deduction is allowed for the taxpayer’s payment of property ownership expenses, such as maintenance, insurance, and taxes, unless the taxpayer owns the property or an interest in it.⁴⁶⁰ Thus, a taxpayer who transfers property to a trust is not allowed to deduct expenses connected with the property that arise after the transfer.⁴⁶¹

2. Constructive Deductions

a. In General

The notion that a taxpayer is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible amounts paid or incurred by another person has not been articulated by the IRS or the courts in those terms. However, just as a taxpayer can be considered to have received under the assignment of income doctrine amounts received by another person, so, too, a deduction that is disallowed to one person under the assignment of deduction doctrine ought to be allowable to the taxpayer whose deduction it actually is. The allowance of what are in effect constructive deductions occurs not only in situations involving one person’s gratuitous payment of the taxpayer’s expense, but also in agency, reimbursement, and corporate situations. These situations are discussed below.

b. Agency

(1) In General

Amounts paid by another person on behalf of the taxpayer are deductible by the taxpayer if the other person is acting as

But see Old Colony Tr. Co. v. Commissioner, 279 U.S. 716 (1929), codified in Reg. §1.61-14 (holding that payment by an employer of an employee’s taxes was income to the employee). Thus, since the taxes were paid as compensation, the employer should be allowed to deduct the taxes paid, as long as the compensation was reasonable. See §162(a)(1).

⁴⁵⁴ E.g., Sharon Herald Co. v. Granger, 195 F.2d 890, 895 (3d Cir. 1952), aff’d 97 F. Supp. 295 (W.D. Pa. 1951); Shoholm v. Commissioner, 30 T.C.M. 1070, 1071 (1971).

the taxpayer's agent.⁴⁶² Thus, in Kohlsaat v. Commissioner,⁴⁶³ the Board of Tax Appeals held that a husband was allowed to deduct mortgage interest paid by his former spouse from funds provided by him for that purpose because he was primarily liable on the mortgage and she was acting as an agent.⁴⁶⁴ In another situation, the IRS Chief Counsel advised that a taxpayer on whose behalf a city government paid interest not only was required to include the payment in gross income, but also was permitted to deduct the amount paid as though the city had made the payment to the taxpayer and the taxpayer had then transferred the money to the creditor.⁴⁶⁵

In contrast, a taxpayer is not allowed to deduct amounts expended by an agent acting in its own right and as a principal rather than as an agent.⁴⁶⁶ A taxpayer is not allowed to deduct amounts paid by its surety to creditors if the payments are made under the surety's direct obligation on its bond, are not loans to the taxpayer, and are not reimbursed by the taxpayer.⁴⁶⁷

(2) Relationship to Assignment of Income Doctrine

If under the assignment of income doctrine a taxpayer must include amounts in gross income that are paid to another person, the taxpayer is allowed to deduct the otherwise deductible expenses of earning that income that are paid by the other person.⁴⁶⁸ This conclusion rests on the principle that otherwise deductible amounts paid by an agent on behalf of the taxpayer are deductible by the taxpayer.⁴⁶⁹ If amounts are received by shareholders in their capacity as shareholders and are not included in the corporation's gross income, then the corporation is not allowed to deduct the amounts paid to the shareholders.⁴⁷⁰

Thus, in Home Juice Co. v. Commissioner,⁴⁷¹ the court held that a corporation was allowed to deduct the portion of rebates received by its sole shareholder from the corporation's supplier but treated as received on behalf of the corporation, to the extent otherwise deductible as reasonable compensation.⁴⁷² However, in Plimpton Tool Co. v. Commissioner,⁴⁷³ the Tax Court held that commissions paid to a corporate employee by an unrelated sales agency were not includible in the corporation's gross income and were not deductible as compensation because the amounts were received by the employee in his individual capacity.⁴⁷⁴

Interest reduction payments to a mortgagee made by a governmental agency on behalf of a corporation formed to acquire and lease low income housing units are deductible by the homeowner as interest on the mortgage.⁴⁷⁵ Furthermore, the interest reduction payments are included in the corporation's gross income and are treated as though constructively paid by the corporation to the mortgagee.⁴⁷⁶ Similarly, payments made by a mortgage loan servicer to a mortgagee as part of a program that effectively reduces the interest rate on mortgage loans owed by members of the armed services are deductible by the service member.⁴⁷⁷

(3) Specific Situations

(a) Partnerships

In Morton v. Commissioner,⁴⁷⁸ the Board of Tax Appeals held that a member of a syndicate primarily liable on a note was allowed to deduct his proportionate share of interest on the note even though the payment was made by a corporation organized by the syndicate.⁴⁷⁹ Similarly, partners are allowed to deduct interest paid by the partnership on debt for which the partners are liable provided the interest is charged to the partners' capital accounts.⁴⁸⁰ If the debt is not one for which the partners can prove they are liable, they are not allowed to deduct the interest paid by the partnership.⁴⁸¹

(b) Corporations and Shareholders

If a shareholder pays interest on the corporation's indebtedness, the corporation is allowed to deduct the payment because it is treated as a contribution by the shareholder to the corporation⁴⁸² and a payment of the interest by the corporation.⁴⁸³ Similarly, a shareholder is allowed to deduct interest paid by a controlled corporation that is charged to the shareholder's account⁴⁸⁴ or credited by the shareholder to the corporation.⁴⁸⁵ The interest deducted by the shareholder otherwise is treated as a constructive dividend.⁴⁸⁶ Although one case has held that consideration in some form must be provided by the shareholder,⁴⁸⁷ that conclusion has been questioned.⁴⁸⁸

(c) Sellers and Purchasers

A seller of property is allowed to deduct mortgage interest paid by the purchaser as part of the consideration for the sale, because the purchaser has in effect paid the amount in question to the seller as part of the purchase price and then received it back for transfer to the seller's mortgagee.⁴⁸⁹ However, if the purchaser pays interest on the seller's indebtedness without a reduction in the purchase price and without the seller's agreement to reimburse the purchaser, the seller is not allowed to deduct the interest paid by the purchaser because the seller does not bear the economic burden of its payment.⁴⁹⁰

c. Reimbursement

A taxpayer is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest paid on the taxpayer's behalf by another person if the taxpayer reimburses the other person.⁴⁹¹ The same result applies if the other person's payment of the taxpayer's interest liability is a gift or loan, because the taxpayer is treated as having received the gift or loan proceeds and then using them to pay the interest.⁴⁹²

A taxpayer is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible expenses paid by an employee on behalf of the taxpayer for which the taxpayer reimburses the employee.⁴⁹³ A corporation is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible expenses paid on its behalf by a shareholder.⁴⁹⁴ The reimbursement can take the form of discharge of a debt owed to the taxpayer by the person acting as agent.⁴⁹⁵

d. Sham Entities

Otherwise deductible amounts paid by an entity that is treated as a sham for tax purposes are deductible by the taxpayer who is the actual owner of the funds used by the entity to make the payments, because the entity is treated as not existing for tax purposes.⁴⁹⁶

e. Corporate Capital Transactions

A corporation is not allowed to deduct an expense paid by its predecessor corporation before it was organized because the expense does not represent a liability incurred by the corporation.⁴⁹⁷ However, a subsidiary is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible compensation paid to its employees by its parent because the payment is treated as a contribution to the subsidiary's capital and payment by the subsidiary to its employees.⁴⁹⁸

Note: A subsidiary should be allowed a deduction with respect to the exercise by its employees of nonqualified stock options for stock of its parent.

A predecessor corporation is allowed to deduct compensation paid to its employees on its behalf by its successor corporation for services rendered to the predecessor corporation before its assets are transferred to the successor.⁴⁹⁹

3. *Trade or Business and For-Profit Activity Expenses*a. In General

One basic principle applicable in determining whether a deduction is allowed to a taxpayer who pays or incurs a deductible trade or business or for-profit activity expense is that the deduction is allowed only if, assuming the other requirements of the deduction are met, the expense relates to the taxpayer's trade or business or for-profit activity.⁵⁰⁰ Thus, payments for services rendered to a trade or business are deductible only to the extent the services are rendered to the taxpayer's trade or business.⁵⁰¹ No deduction is allowed to a spouse who pays the other spouse's legal expenses of litigating claims as a beneficiary of a trust if there is no connection between the payor's trade or business and the legal expenses.⁵⁰² A parent who was the registered owner of a music business purchased equipment for the business and co-signed the checking account for the business was not allowed to deduct business deductions attributable to the music business because parent's children operated the business, gave the lessons, did the planning, and kept the records.⁵⁰³

A second principle is that payment of the expenses of a person with whom the taxpayer has a business relationship, even if made for business purposes, does not entitle the taxpayer to a deduction merely because the expenses would be deductible if paid by the other person, but if the payment is an ordinary and necessary business expense of the taxpayer because it is customary in the taxpayer's trade or business to pay the other person's expenses for business purposes, then the payment is deductible.⁵⁰⁴ The issue of whether such a payment is ordinary and necessary is discussed in detail in 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions.

A third principle is that a taxpayer is not allowed to deduct an otherwise deductible amount if the taxpayer is entitled to reimbursement,⁵⁰⁵ unless the reimbursement is included in gross income,⁵⁰⁶ is worthless,⁵⁰⁷ or is unlikely to be collected.⁵⁰⁸ Thus, censees to owners.⁵²⁶ If the taxpayer is not entitled to reimbursement, the principle does not apply.⁵²⁷ Whether the taxpayer is entitled to reimbursement is a question of fact.⁵²⁸

The application of these general principles to specific situations is discussed below.

b. Employers and Employees

Employers are not allowed to deduct amounts paid for employees' personal expenses unless they are intended as compensation and satisfy the conditions for the deductibility of compensation, described in 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions.⁵²⁹ Thus, no deduction is allowed to an employer for the amount of a bail bond advanced on behalf of an employee who has been arrested.⁵³⁰ In Scott & Assocs., Ltd. v. Commissioner,⁵³¹ the court held that payment of rent for an employee's residence was not an ordinary and necessary expense because it was done merely for the convenience of the employee's spouse who shared office space with the employer.⁵³² In J. Gordon Turnbull, Inc. v. Commissioner, the Tax Court held that an employer is not allowed to deduct the cost of tax advice provided to employees with respect to personal matters.⁵³³

Note: Turnbull was decided before the enactment of §132. The IRS may treat the employer's payment as a taxable fringe benefit, includible in the employee's gross income, and deductible by the employer as compensation under §162. In years when miscellaneous itemized deductions are deductible, the employee arguably would be allowed to deduct the payment as a constructive §212 deduction, subject to the §67 2% limitation.⁵³⁴

In Reis v. Commissioner,⁵³⁵ the court held that an employer was allowed to deduct payments made to the trustee in bankruptcy of an employee who was also the employer's spouse because allegations had been made that the employee spouse had transferred assets to the employer spouse and the payment was necessary to maintain the business reputation of the employer spouse.⁵³⁶ But no deduction is allowed for an employer's payment of damages caused by an employee's spouse as director of an unrelated corporation.⁵³⁷

Generally, an employee is not allowed to deduct as a trade or business expense any amount paid solely for the purpose of advancing the business interests of the employer.⁵³⁸ Thus, no deduction is allowed to an employee for the cost of a safe deposit box in which the employee, though not required to do so, stored certain papers of the employer.⁵³⁹ No deduction is allowed for an employee's voluntary use of the employee's property in pursuit of the employer's business.⁵⁴⁰

However, an employee is allowed to deduct a fine withheld from a paycheck because of a violation by the employer.⁵⁴¹ In Tyler v. Commissioner,⁵⁴² the court held that an employee was allowed to deduct small amounts paid on behalf of the employer because the employee's salary had been established in contemplation of the employee being responsible to pay for these types of expenses.⁵⁴³ In Pickett v. Commissioner,⁵⁴⁴ the court held that a sales manager was allowed to deduct unreimbursed expenses paid to promote his employer's project.⁵⁴⁵

No deduction is allowed to an employee for the expense of purchasing a stock warrant to assist the employer in obtaining a loan, because incurring such an expense is not ordinary and necessary to the business of being an employee, so the expense must be capitalized.⁵⁴⁶

No deduction is allowed to the spouse of an employee who pays some of the employer's debts to protect the employee's business reputation.⁵⁴⁷ These amounts are characterized as contributions to the employer's capital.⁵⁴⁸

c. Independent Contractors

In Friedman v. Delaney,⁵⁴⁹ the First Circuit held that no deduction was allowable to an attorney who paid the obligations of a client after promising the client's creditors that they would be paid.⁵⁵⁰ However, in Pepper v. Commissioner,⁵⁵¹ the Tax Court allowed an attorney to deduct payments to individuals who had invested in the client based on the attorney's recommendation and who incurred losses because of the client's fraud about which the attorney had no knowledge.⁵⁵² In Delaney v. Commissioner,⁵⁵³ the Tax Court held that an attorney was allowed to deduct expenditures made on a client's behalf.⁵⁵⁴ However, in Greenspan v. Commissioner,⁵⁵⁵ the Tax Court held that an attorney was not allowed to deduct reimbursement of a relative's losses incurred on a sale erroneously made on the attorney's advice.⁵⁵⁶

In Boyle, Flagg & Seaman, Inc. v. Commissioner,⁵⁵⁷ the Tax Court held that an insurance broker was allowed to deduct a client's premium increases paid by the broker when the broker moved the client's insurance to a new company and had made errors in quoting the premium rates.⁵⁵⁸ The IRS has similarly ruled with respect to a broker's payment of a client's cost of obtaining new insurance after the insurance company with which the broker had written the client's insurance was suspended.⁵⁵⁹

The IRS has also ruled that a moving and storage company that reimburses losses incurred by its uninsured customers whose belongings were destroyed in a fire at the company's warehouse, is allowed to deduct the payments because they were made to protect the company's business reputation.⁵⁶⁰ The same conclusion has been reached for the same reason with respect to a termite company's expenses in retreating certain substandard work performed by the corporation from which it acquired its business, even though the work was unguaranteed and thus the economic burden of the customers.⁵⁶¹ In Canton Cotton Mills v. United States,⁵⁶² the court held that a processor was allowed to deduct refunds made to customers who had been charged higher prices to reflect a processing tax that subsequently was invalidated.⁵⁶³ However, no deduction is allowed for the payment of clients' business expansion expenses if the sole reason is to obtain future income from the expanded businesses.⁵⁶⁴

d. Corporations, Promoters, Shareholders and Officers

(1) Shareholder's Payment of Corporation's Expenses

(a) In General

Generally, shareholders are not allowed to deduct expenditures made on behalf of their corporation.⁵⁶⁵ Many different reasons have been advanced. One is that the trade or business of the corporation is a separate activity from the activities of the shareholders as investors.⁵⁶⁶ A second is that expenses that are the obligation of the corporation usually are not the obligation of the shareholder.⁵⁶⁷ A third is that the expenses are not ordinary to the shareholders because the corporation is allowed to deduct them.⁵⁶⁸ A fourth is that a shareholder who is not an officer or director is not in the trade or business of managing the corporation.⁵⁶⁹ A fifth is the remoteness of the corporate expenses paid by the shareholder to the shareholder's investment.⁵⁷⁰ A sixth is that the corporation is a separate entity and that its expenses are not the shareholders' expenses.⁵⁷¹ The fact that the corporation is financially unable to pay the expenses does not cause them to become expenses of the shareholder.⁵⁷² A shareholder's spouse who is not a shareholder but who pays otherwise deductible expenses of the corporation likewise is not allowed to deduct the payments.⁵⁷³

If the shareholder's payment of the corporation's expenses and debts causes the shareholder to acquire stock or securities of the corporation, no deduction is allowable because the shareholder's expenditure constitutes the cost of the stock or securities and must be capitalized.⁵⁷⁴

(b) Expenses Treated as Corporation's

In Schrott v. Commissioner,⁵⁷⁵ the court held that amounts paid by shareholders to reimburse their corporation for legal expenses it incurred as a result of a contract fraud were not deductible by the shareholders because the legal expenses resulted from the corporation's trade or business and not from the shareholders' trade or business.⁵⁷⁶ In Eisenrod v. Commissioner,⁵⁷⁷ the court held that no deduction was allowable to a taxpayer for judgments rendered in the bankruptcy proceeding of a corporation controlled by the taxpayer.⁵⁷⁸ In Acree v. Commissioner,⁵⁷⁹ the court held that the principal shareholder and officer of a bank was not allowed to deduct his payment of the corporation's loan losses.⁵⁸⁰

No deduction is allowable to a shareholder for travel or other expenses paid or incurred in obtaining financing for the corporation.⁵⁸¹ No deduction is allowed for compensation paid by shareholders to employees for services rendered to the corporation.⁵⁸² The payment of premiums by shareholders for life insurance on their own lives is not deductible, even if required by the corporation's creditors.⁵⁸³

In Gantner v. Commissioner,⁵⁸⁴ the court held that the controlling shareholder was not allowed to deduct the cost of computers purchased by the shareholder for use by the corporation.⁵⁸⁵ A shareholder is not allowed to deduct rent paid with respect to premises used by a corporation if the lease is assigned to the corporation and the rent is the corporation's obligation.⁵⁸⁶ No deduction is allowed for amounts paid in the nature of interest by shareholders on property borrowed and used to further corporate purposes.⁵⁸⁷ The same principle applies to the shareholder's payment of the corporation's office expenses⁵⁸⁸ and legal expenses.⁵⁸⁹

A shareholder is not allowed to deduct compensation paid to a corporate employee for services rendered to the corporation, even if the shareholder contractually agrees to do so.⁵⁹⁰ However, a taxpayer whose closely-held corporation hired an employee is allowed to deduct compensation paid by the taxpayer to the employee for services performed for the taxpayer's sole proprietorship.⁵⁹¹

Note: The prohibition against a shareholder's deduction of corporate expenses paid by the shareholder can be avoided if the shareholder can demonstrate that the expenses were the obligation of the shareholder and not the corporation.

(c) Treatment of Nondeductible Amounts Paid by Shareholders

The amount of corporate expenses paid by shareholders is treated as a contribution to capital.⁵⁹² The most that these additional investments can generate is a capital loss when the shareholder disposes of the stock.⁵⁹³

(d) Scope of Restriction

The prohibition against a shareholder's deduction of corporate expenses cannot be avoided if the corporation and shareholder merely agree that a corporate expense is the shareholder's expense.⁵⁹⁴ Nor does it matter that the shareholder, by paying the corporation's expenses, avoids secondary liability and prevents liquidation of the corporation.⁵⁹⁵ The fact that the shareholder is not reimbursed or does not seek reimbursement does not convert the corporation's expenses into the shareholder's expenses.⁵⁹⁶ The result is not changed if the shareholder charges the corporation for the shareholder's services if the amount charged is insufficient to permit the shareholder to make a profit and the shareholder is not otherwise in the trade or business of rendering such services to corporations generally.⁵⁹⁷ It does not matter if the shareholder is a landlord of the corporation and pays the corporation's expenses to keep its tenant afloat.⁵⁹⁸

(e) Payment to Protect Shareholder

(i) In General

A shareholder's payment of the corporation's expenses or debts is deductible by the shareholder if the payment is made to protect the reputation or standing of some other business or job of the shareholder, in which case the payment is an ordinary and necessary expense of that other business and is not merely the expense of the corporation.⁵⁹⁹ Thus, if the shareholder has no other trade or business, no deduction is allowed.⁶⁰⁰

In Allen v. Commissioner,⁶⁰¹ the Seventh Circuit reversed the Tax Court and held that a major shareholder was allowed to deduct payment of the corporation's debt because it was made to protect the reputation and credit standing of the shareholder's sole proprietorship.⁶⁰² The National Office has advised that the corporate parent of a foreign subsidiary could deduct amounts advanced to repay its subsidiary's creditors, because the parent's intent was to protect its own reputation within the international banking community, rather than restoring the failed subsidiaries financial health.⁶⁰³ In Lutz v. Commissioner,⁶⁰⁴ the Fifth Circuit did likewise, holding that payments of a corporation's expenses made to maintain the shareholder's credit and business license were deductible.⁶⁰⁵ In Milbank v. Commissioner,⁶⁰⁶ the Tax Court allowed a similar deduction⁶⁰⁷ and in Gould v. Commissioner,⁶⁰⁸ the Tax Court allowed a deduction for a shareholder's payment of a corporation's debt that was made in order to protect the shareholder's job at another corporation.⁶⁰⁹

Observation: The distinction is between payment by the shareholder of the corporation's expenses or debts on behalf of the corporation and payment by the shareholder on behalf of the shareholder's own business.

No deduction is allowed if the payment is made merely to protect the shareholder's investment⁶¹⁰ or to expand another business of the shareholder.⁶¹¹ A shareholder is not allowed to deduct advertising and promotion expenses paid for two newly organized savings associations in order to obtain insurance business that would have been obtained in any event.⁶¹²

(ii) Determination of Purpose for Payment

The question of whether the payment is made to protect business reputation or credit standing is one of fact.⁶¹³ In Jenkins v. Commissioner,⁶¹⁴ the Tax Court allowed a singer who was the sole shareholder of a corporation operating a restaurant to deduct payment of the corporation's debts, because failure to do so would have harmed the singing career.⁶¹⁵ In Modell v. Commissioner,⁶¹⁶ the Tax Court denied a deduction to an accountant for payment of his corporation's expenses, because the corporation was in the business of removing rust and thus the payments were not made to protect the accountant's reputation as an accountant.⁶¹⁷

(f) Payments by Shareholder as Promoter

Expenses paid by a shareholder before the formation of the corporation are not deductible.⁶¹⁸ These amounts are treated as contributions to capital.⁶¹⁹

In Bing v. Helvering,⁶²⁰ the court held that a shareholder who paid a commission for assistance in obtaining financing used to organize the corporation was not allowed to deduct the amount paid.⁶²¹ In Milne v. Commissioner,⁶²² the court held that expenses paid by a shareholder to resume a corporation's business after a war ended were not deductible by the shareholder.⁶²³

(g) Payments After Corporate Liquidation

In In re Ames,⁶²⁴ the court held that corporation business expenses paid by the sole shareholder after the corporation was liquidated were deductible by the shareholder who was continuing the corporation's business.⁶²⁵ In Goldner v. Commissioner,⁶²⁶ the court held that the shareholders were not allowed to deduct litigation expenses against a liquidated corporation of which they were transferees.⁶²⁷

(h) Payments While Corporate Charter Is in Suspend

Payment by a shareholder of the corporation's otherwise deductible expenses while the corporation's charter is in suspend does not make those expenses deductible by the shareholder.⁶²⁸ So long as the corporation has not been liquidated, its business does not become the shareholder's sole proprietorship.⁶²⁹ It is irrelevant that under state law the shareholder is obligated to pay the expenses.⁶³⁰

(i) Former Shareholders

In Kaufmann v. Commissioner,⁶³¹ the court held that no deduction was allowed for the payment, pursuant to an agreement, of a corporation's debts by individuals who had been its shareholders.⁶³²

(2) Officer's Payment of Corporation's Expenses

(a) In General

Generally, an officer's payment of the corporation's expenses or debts is not deductible by the officer.⁶³³ Thus, no deduction is allowed for an officer's payment of expenses of a corporation engaged in liquor sales if the officer is a physician not in the liquor business and the officer's reputation as a physician would not be harmed by the failure of the corporation.⁶³⁴ Likewise, an officer is not allowed to deduct as a trade or business expense any amount paid solely for the purpose of advancing the business interests of the corporation.⁶³⁵ The expense of repurchasing shares of the corporation's stock that had been sold in possible violation of federal securities laws must be capitalized.⁶³⁶

However, if the officer is required by the corporation to bear the burden of expenses paid that exceed the corporation's reimbursement, the officer is allowed to deduct those expenses because the officer is not voluntarily paying a corporate obligation.⁶³⁷ It does not matter that the officer was influential in establishing the corporation's reimbursement policy.⁶³⁸

(b) Expenses Treated as Corporation's

An officer is not allowed to deduct compensation paid to an employee of the corporation because the officer is not the employer.⁶³⁹ However, an officer is allowed to deduct compensation paid to an individual hired by the officer to assist the officer in performing corporate duties provided that the officer, and not the corporation, compensates the individual and provided that the individual is the employee of the officer.⁶⁴⁰ In contrast, in In re Titus,⁶⁴¹ the Board of Tax Appeals allowed an officer to deduct compensation paid to a corporate employee for services rendered directly to the corporation because the officer wanted to retain the employee to work on the officer's individual ventures.⁶⁴²

In Acree v. Commissioner,⁶⁴³ the court held that the principal shareholder and officer of a bank was not allowed to deduct his payment of the corporation's loan losses.⁶⁴⁴ In Hickey v. Chahoon,⁶⁴⁵ the court held that a bank president was not allowed to deduct the bank's losses even though the president was contractually obligated to indemnify the bank against the losses under an agreement purportedly imposing the obligation on the president to preserve his income, because the bank had sufficient assets to pay its own losses.⁶⁴⁶

(c) Scope of Restriction

The prohibition against an officer's deduction of corporate expenses cannot be avoided by charging the corporation for the officer's activities if the amount charged is insufficient to permit the officer to make a profit and the officer is not otherwise in the trade or business of rendering such services to corporations generally.⁶⁴⁷

(d) Payments to Protect Officer

If an officer's payment of a corporate expense is made to protect the reputation or standing of some other business or job of the officer, the payment is deductible because it is an ordinary and necessary expense of that other business and is not merely the expense of the corporation.⁶⁴⁸

(3) Corporation's Payment of Shareholder's Expenses

(a) In General

Generally, it is not ordinary and necessary for a corporation to pay its shareholders' expenses and obligations.⁶⁴⁹ Thus, no deduction is allowed for amounts paid by the corporation for services that are rendered to its shareholders in their individual capacities.⁶⁵⁰ This principle applies to legal fees and expenses incurred in connection with disputes between shareholders and their spouses,⁶⁵¹ even if it involves a spouse's attempt to obtain management input that would be detrimental to the corporation,⁶⁵² and to amounts transferred to a spouse on behalf of a shareholder.⁶⁵³ It also applies to expenses of litigating the shareholder's personal tax matters,⁶⁵⁴ even if connected with ownership of the stock⁶⁵⁵ or with a business subsequently transferred by the shareholder to the corporation,⁶⁵⁶ legal and accounting fees allocable to the shareholder's interests in other corporations,⁶⁵⁷ the shareholder's personal medical expenses,⁶⁵⁸ personal accounting services,⁶⁵⁹ personal legal services,⁶⁶⁰ personal recreational activities,⁶⁶¹ and the childcare expenses of the shareholder's child.⁶⁶² No deduction is allowed for the corporation's payment of the shareholder's tax liabilities on distributions loaned by them to the corporation.⁶⁶³ A corporation that pays legal fees for defending its sole shareholder against criminal bribery and income tax evasion charges is not allowed to deduct those fees even though they are paid from the corporation's funds.⁶⁶⁴

Note: If the shareholder is an employee, the payment might be treated as deductible compensation.⁶⁶⁵

(b) Shareholder Property

In D. H. Willey Lumber Co. v. Commissioner,⁶⁶⁶ and in Magnon v. Commissioner,⁶⁶⁷ the court held that a corporation was not allowed to deduct expenses that it paid with respect to the maintenance of property belonging to a shareholder.⁶⁶⁸ The same result has been reached with respect to improvements to the shareholder's property.⁶⁶⁹ It also has been reached with respect to the corporation's payment of expenses of corporate property used as a residence by a shareholder⁶⁷⁰ and to the corporation's payment of expenses allocable to the shareholder's personal use of a corporate vehicle.⁶⁷¹ No deduction is allowed for expenses paid by the corporation in connection with the condemnation of property previously transferred to the shareholder.⁶⁷²

(c) Shareholder Stock Transfers

No deduction is allowed to a corporation for payments to one shareholder for that shareholder's transfer of stock to another shareholder.⁶⁷³ Nor is a corporation allowed to deduct amounts paid with respect to a shareholder's obligation to purchase another shareholder's stock in the corporation merely because it voluntarily assumes that obligation.⁶⁷⁴ However, if the shareholder agrees to sell the stock to an employee on behalf of the corporation and the employee is discharged, the corporation's payment to the employee to settle the employee's breach of contract action against the shareholder is deductible.⁶⁷⁵

A corporation is not allowed to deduct the expenses of redeeming a shareholder's stock and selling that stock to another shareholder if the redemption and transfer is made for the shareholder's, rather than the corporation's, benefit,⁶⁷⁶ nor is the corporation allowed to deduct the expenses of a shareholder's sale of stock to another shareholder or to the corporation.⁶⁷⁷ No deduction is allowed for payments to settle a shareholder's alleged right to purchase newly issued stock if the dispute is in substance one among the shareholders with respect to their proportionate interests.⁶⁷⁸

A corporation is not allowed to deduct as a trade or business expense interest that it pays on a loan obtained by it and a shareholder to finance the shareholder's purchase of stock from a third person.⁶⁷⁹

⁶⁷⁹ Miles v. Commissioner, 25 T.C.M. 1278, 1284 (1966).

(d) Expenses of Predecessor Partnership of Shareholders

In Reade Mfg. Co. v. United States,⁶⁸⁰ the Third Circuit held that a corporation was not allowed to deduct tort liability incurred by a partnership whose partners had subsequently formed the corporation because there was insufficient moral compulsion to make the payment.⁶⁸¹ In United States v. Smith,⁶⁸² the Fifth Circuit held that the deductibility by a corporation of a predecessor partnership's expenses depended on whether the corporation assumed the obligation to do so and on the nature of the assumption.⁶⁸³

(e) Jointly Incurred Expenses

If the corporation pays otherwise deductible expenses that benefit both the corporation's interests and the shareholder's individual interests, the determination of whether the expense is an expense of the corporation is a question of fact.⁶⁸⁴ Thus, in Blackwell Oil & Gas Co. v. Commissioner,⁶⁸⁵ the court held that the corporation was not allowed to deduct amounts paid to settle claims against the shareholders and directors that they conspired to prevent exercise of purchase options on the corporation's stock.⁶⁸⁶ A similar result was reached with respect to the corporation's payment to settle a threatened action against it and its shareholders to enforce an option to purchase the corporation's business.⁶⁸⁷ In Dolese v. United States,⁶⁸⁸ the court held that a corporation was allowed to deduct legal expenses incurred in connection with a shareholder's divorce in which the shareholder's spouse sued the corporation and succeeded in placing the corporation's activities under the supervision of the court.⁶⁸⁹ In contrast, the expenses paid by the corporation for audits and record reconstructions required by the divorce court were held not to be deductible, even though the corporation obtained incidental benefits, because they were performed to value marital property.⁶⁹⁰

In Old Town Corp. v. Commissioner,⁶⁹¹ the court held that the corporation was allowed to deduct amounts paid to settle an action brought against it and the shareholders for an alleged breach of an employment contract, considering that the shareholders threatened to sue the corporation for reimbursement and the corporation reasonably believed they would succeed.⁶⁹² A corporation's payment of expenses in defending a lawsuit against a shareholder in connection with the shareholder's representation of the corporation was held to be deductible because the corporation had reason to conclude it was legally obligated to make the payments.⁶⁹³ Likewise, a corporation's payment of legal fees to defend itself and its president against charges of antitrust violations were deductible because reversal of the president's conviction benefited the corporation.⁶⁹⁴

(f) Shareholder Derivative Suits

A corporation is allowed to deduct the expenses of a shareholder's derivative suit.⁶⁹⁵ This applies whether the court orders the corporation to pay the expenses⁶⁹⁶ or the corporation is obligated under local law to do so.⁶⁹⁷

(4) Corporation's Payment of Officer's Expenses

Generally, it is not necessary for a corporation to pay its officers' expenses and obligations.⁶⁹⁸ Thus, the corporation is not allowed to deduct an officer's selling expenses that it pays.⁶⁹⁹ Nor is a corporation permitted to deduct expenses of building homes on land owned by its president that the president subsequently sells through another corporation, because the expenses are those of the president and not the corporation.⁷⁰⁰

(5) Corporation's Payment of Bondholder's Expenses

In Sharon Herald Co. v. Granger,⁷⁰¹ the court held that a corporation was not allowed to deduct corporate loan taxes imposed on bondholders on whom the tax was imposed, because the corporation had not made itself legally obligated to pay those taxes on behalf of the bondholders.⁷⁰²

(6) Corporation's Payment of Subsidiary's and Affiliate's Expenses

(a) Operating Expenses

In Interstate Transit Lines v. Commissioner,⁷⁰³ the Supreme Court held that a corporation was not allowed to deduct the operating deficit of a subsidiary that it had paid.⁷⁰⁴ The same result has been reached with respect to the payment of advances to a wholly-owned foreign subsidiary⁷⁰⁵ and to payments to depositors of an affiliated bank whose assets were acquired by the taxpayer when the bank failed.⁷⁰⁶ It does not matter that the subsidiary is the corporation's principal asset.⁷⁰⁷ It does not matter that the corporation agreed to pay the claims before it made payment.⁷⁰⁸

However, in Texas & Pacific Ry. Co. v. Commissioner,⁷⁰⁹ the Tax Court held that the Interstate Transit principle did not apply to a corporation that paid the operating expenses of a subsidiary that was formed to provide service to the corporation.⁷¹⁰ Deductions also have been allowed in cases in which the subsidiary was the sole source of supply for the payor.⁷¹¹

In L. Heller & Son, Inc. v. Commissioner,⁷¹² the Tax Court held that payment of a subsidiary's debts after the subsidiary underwent bankruptcy reorganization was deductible because it was made to restore the credit standing of a subsidiary whose name, business, and creditors were substantially similar to those of the taxpayer.⁷¹³ No such deduction is allowed if the subsidiary's business and credit standing are not closely related to the taxpayer's,⁷¹⁴ if the payment is not made to improve the corporation's business relations with third parties,⁷¹⁵ or if the payment is not made to protect the taxpayer's reputation or credit standing.⁷¹⁶ No deduction is allowed if the payment is made to protect the corporation's investment in the subsidiary's stock,⁷¹⁷ if the payment is made to expand the payor's business,⁷¹⁸ or if the payment is made to protect another business owned by shareholders and their relatives.⁷¹⁹

A corporation that has the right to set the amount of its affiliate's cost of goods purchased from the corporation, thus affecting the amount of the affiliate's income or loss, is not permitted to deduct the affiliate's expenses on the ground that it has entered into a contract with the affiliate to pay the affiliate's losses.⁷²⁰ However, a corporation is allowed to deduct expenses of affiliated corporations that are no longer in existence if payment of those expenses is required as a condition of obtaining a bona fide loan from a creditor that had loaned money to the affiliated corporations.⁷²¹

sidary must be treated as a capital contribution to the subsidiary.⁷²²

(b) Compensation

Amounts paid by a corporation to its employees that are charged on the books to the corporation's foreign subsidiaries for cost-control purposes are deductible by the corporation if the employees are performing services for the corporation and not for the subsidiaries.⁷²³ Amounts paid by a corporation to employees performing services for foreign subsidiaries are deductible by the corporation only to the extent the corporation directly benefits from those services,⁷²⁴ but the IRS takes the position that this principle does not apply to stock options granted by a corporation to its subsidiary's employees because §83 overrides §162, preventing the application of a "direct benefit" exception to the requirement in §83 that the options be granted to the taxpayer's employees if the taxpayer is to have a deduction.⁷²⁵ However, amounts paid by the corporation merely to assist its subsidiary are not deductible by the corporation.⁷²⁶

In Austin Co. v. Commissioner,⁷²⁷ the Tax Court held that a corporation was not allowed to deduct employment taxes paid by it with respect to employees loaned to a subsidiary because the payment did not directly and proximately benefit the corporation and was made merely to assist the subsidiary, even though the corporation's business reason for paying the taxes was to reduce its annual personnel maintenance overhead expenses.⁷²⁸ No deduction is allowed for a parent corporation's compensation of security guards hired to protect the property of a subsidiary.⁷²⁹

No deduction is allowed for stock bonuses paid to employees and surviving spouses of deceased employees of the taxpayer's subsidiary.⁷³⁰ The same conclusion applies to cash bonuses.⁷³¹

(c) Warranty Expenses

In Coulter Elecs., Inc. v. Commissioner,⁷³² the Tax Court held that a corporation was allowed to deduct warranty expenses incurred by a subsidiary because the subsidiary's failure to provide services of the same quality as those provided by the corporation would diminish the corporation's reputation.⁷³³ The court applied the ordinary and necessary test to support this conclusion.⁷³⁴

(d) Equity Transactions

The loss incurred by a corporation by converting its subsidiary's debentures into its own stock is not a trade or business deduction of the corporation.⁷³⁵ No deduction is allowed for assets transferred by a corporation to a corporation controlled by its shareholder, particularly if the two corporations are engaged in different types of business.⁷³⁶

No deduction is allowed for the legal expenses of restructuring a subsidiary under an antitrust decree requiring severance of the parent's interests.⁷³⁷ No deduction is allowed for the cost of an audit of a liquidating corporation that is paid by the corporation if the audit primarily benefits the shareholders of the successor corporation.⁷³⁸

(7) Subsidiary's Payments to Parent

In Smith-Bridgman & Co. v. Commissioner,⁷³⁹ the court held that a subsidiary was allowed to deduct compensation paid to its parent for management services rendered to it by an officer of the parent, even though the officer was directly compensated by the subsidiary for other services rendered to it by the officer in his capacity as officer of the subsidiary.⁷⁴⁰

(8) Corporation's Payment of Predecessor's Expenses

No deduction is allowed to a corporation for the payment of expenses of a business that it acquires.⁷⁴¹ The rationale for the disallowance is that the payment is part of the purchase price of the predecessor's assets or stock, and thus must be capitalized.⁷⁴² The capitalization rules are discussed in 509 T.M., Principles of Capitalization.

A corporation is not allowed to deduct payments made on the debt of a predecessor, whether or not incorporated.⁷⁴³ Likewise, no deduction is allowed for a corporation's payment of a debt with respect to which its predecessor was guarantor.⁷⁴⁴ The same principle applies to the payment of contingent claims for which the corporation assumed liability when it acquired the assets of its predecessor⁷⁴⁵ and to liabilities that had not been asserted at the time of the acquisition of the predecessor's assets.⁷⁴⁶

Note: The cases do not address the issue of whether the payments should be treated as additional purchase price that, to the extent allocated to depreciable or amortizable assets, would generate additional depreciation or amortization deductions.

In Scovill Mfg. Co. v. Fitzpatrick,⁷⁴⁷ the court held that a corporation was allowed to deduct contributions to a pension trust established by another corporation before the taxpayer acquired all of its stock.⁷⁴⁸ In United States v. Minneapolis & St. Louis Ry.,⁷⁴⁹ the court held that a corporation was allowed to deduct retroactive wage increases for periods its employees were employed by its predecessor corporation, because the liability for making those payments was not approved by the receivership court until after the predecessor's assets had been acquired by the corporation.⁷⁵⁰ The IRS has ruled that the surviving corporation in a merger is allowed to deduct severance payments and supplemental allowances paid by the corporation to former employees of the corporation that was absorbed in the merger.⁷⁵¹ The IRS has also ruled that severance payment deductions were allowable to the surviving corporation in a §338 asset acquisition because the obligation to make the payments arose after the assets were acquired.⁷⁵²

It does not matter that the predecessor has the same name as the corporation.⁷⁵³ Nor does it matter that a court has ordered that the payment be made.⁷⁵⁴

(9) Corporation's Payment of Another Corporation's Expenses

Generally, a corporation's payment of another corporation's expenses is not deductible. However, if the payment is made to protect the payor's business interests and is ordinary and necessary in the context of the payor's industry, it is deductible as an expense of the payor.⁷⁵⁵ Thus, a corporation in the business of delivering products abroad was allowed to deduct the expenses it paid for a Guatemalan company in the business of delivering products to the United States, because the Guatemalan company included promotional material for the taxpayer in its shipments, generating increased revenue for the taxpayer.⁷⁵⁶ The exception does not apply to expenses paid by an S corporation with respect to partially completed contracts transferred to C corporations if those expenses are paid after the transfer and do not benefit the S corporation.⁷⁵⁷

The IRS has ruled that contributions by utilities owning nuclear generating plants towards the cleanup of damage at a nuclear generating plant owned by an unrelated utility are deductible because they reduce the utilities' financing costs, improve the public's perception of the industry, and are an acceptable means of dealing with an industry-wide problem.⁷⁵⁸ The IRS has extended this conclusion to contributions by utilities not owning nuclear generating plants⁷⁵⁹ and to contributions by utility holding companies.⁷⁶⁰

A corporation's payment of another corporation's dividends pursuant to a guaranty made as part of a sales promotion is deductible.⁷⁶¹ The same result has been reached when the purpose was to raise capital through sale of the other corporation's stock.⁷⁶²

Payments made by a corporation to the creditors of another corporation in order to protect the payor's reputation or credit have been allowed as deductions when the two corporations were considered one business by the public⁷⁶³ or were both entirely owned by the same shareholder.⁷⁶⁴ However, a deduction was disallowed to a bank that paid half of a judgment against the shareholders of a second bank, because there was no obligation to make the payment, there was no particular business benefit connected to the second bank, there was no business practice in the banking industry of making such payments, and the relationship between the banks would not have deteriorated if the payment were not made.⁷⁶⁵

A corporation that pays the income taxes of another company without being contractually obligated to do so is not allowed to deduct those taxes as a cost of earning income from a contract with that other company to sell and service its products.⁷⁶⁶ A corporation that pays debts of another corporation without obtaining an economic benefit from doing so is not allowed to deduct those payments, even if the paying corporation regularly makes purchases from the debtor corporation and even if the debtor corporation is owned by relatives of the paying corporation's shareholders.⁷⁶⁷

e. Unincorporated Association

The deductible expenses of a trust established by an unincorporated association are not allowed to the unincorporated association.⁷⁶⁸ Policyholders in mutual aid associations are not allowed to deduct amounts paid to advertise businesses after those businesses are transferred to the association.⁷⁶⁹

f. Partnerships and Partners

A partnership is not allowed to deduct, and thus the partners are not allowed to deduct, amounts paid in settlement of litigation brought against one partner in that partner's individual capacity.⁷⁷⁰ This principle applies to amounts paid to prevent financial damage to a partnership by a partner's spouse's demands in a divorce action.⁷⁷¹

Nor is a partnership allowed to deduct amounts paid to an investment advisor for advice given to its limited partners before they invested in the partnership.⁷⁷²

The mere fact that an expense is to be borne by, and allocated to, fewer than all of the partners does not preclude the partnership from taking into account the expense in determining its taxable income.⁷⁷³ If one partner pays partnership employees additional compensation that is otherwise deductible, the partner is allowed to deduct the amount paid.⁷⁷⁴ However, if the compensation is paid by the partner for services rendered directly to the partner for personal purposes, no deduction is allowed.⁷⁷⁵ Likewise, payments by a partner to a relative who is employed by the partnership and that do not represent compensation are not deductible.⁷⁷⁶

Note: In the partnership context, the question of whether the partnership or the partner "deducts" the expense is actually an aspect of the manner in which partnership expenses are allocated among the partners.⁷⁷⁷ Payment of a partnership expense by a partner who is not reimbursed is, assuming no facts to the contrary, prima facie proof that the partner bears the economic burden of that expense. Partnership allocations are described in III.C.4.a., below, and are discussed in detail in 712 T.M., Partnerships — Taxable Income; Allocation of Distributive Shares; Capital Accounts.

A partner is not allowed to deduct the entire amount of unreimbursed expenses paid on behalf of the partnership and for which the partner is entitled to reimbursement.⁷⁷⁸ However, if the partner agrees to be responsible for the expenditure, the deduction is allowable.⁷⁷⁹

In Fihe v. Commissioner,⁷⁸⁰ the court held that a taxpayer who revealed his partner's fraud was not allowed to deduct legal fees paid for the partner's defense.⁷⁸¹ A corporation is not allowed to deduct compensation paid to shareholder-officers for services rendered to a joint venture in which the corporation is a venturer.⁷⁸²

A former partner who pays for the determination of a dissolved partnership's state tax liabilities is allowed to deduct those amounts to the extent the determination reduces the partner's penalties for failure of the partnership to pay the taxes, if the benefit to the other former partners is merely incidental.⁷⁸³ When a partnership dissolves, payments to one partner in the nature of retirement pay are deductible by the other partners who make the payments.⁷⁸⁴

g. Partnership's Payment of Corporation's Expenses

Deductions have been allowed to a law firm for payments made under an agreement to reimburse the losses of a newly formed savings and loan association because the payments were made to protect the firm's title abstract business.⁷⁸⁵ Likewise, deductions have been allowed for a partnership's payment of the expenses of a nonprofit corporation formed by the partners in order to maintain the medical fees being collected by the partnership from the hospital.⁷⁸⁶

h. Landlords and Tenants

In Hennepin Holding Co. v. Commissioner,⁷⁸⁷ the Board of Tax Appeals allowed a landlord to deduct expenses incurred in advertising and rehabilitating a tenant's business in order to prevent loss of the rental income being generated for the landlord by the tenant.⁷⁸⁸

Comment: The allowance of the landlord's deduction in Hennepin is consistent with the allowance of a rent rebate or a decrease in gross income from a rent reduction. All three are methods of easing the tenant's economic burden for a purpose related to the landlord's rental activities.

i. Tenants in Common

A taxpayer who is entitled to reimbursement from co-owners of rental property is not allowed to deduct more than the taxpayer's share of the expenses.⁷⁸⁹ It does not matter if the taxpayer provided all of the funds for the purchase or regularly paid all of the expenses, because the reimbursement right precluded characterization of the reimbursable expenses as ordinary and necessary with respect to the taxpayer.⁷⁹⁰

j. Trusts, Grantors, and Beneficiaries

As a general proposition, trust beneficiaries are not allowed to deduct the trust's business and for-profit activity expenses.⁷⁹¹ In Bernheim v. Commissioner,⁷⁹² the court held that a beneficiary who owned a remainder interest in a trust was not allowed to deduct business expenses of the trust that he paid.⁷⁹³ The same principle has been applied to the attempt by the owner of the remainder to deduct amounts paid by the trustee in final settlement of litigation with respect to distributions from the trust.⁷⁹⁴ Nor is a sole beneficiary allowed to deduct compensation paid to the trustees for services performed for the trust.⁷⁹⁵

A grantor of a trust treated as a grantor trust is allowed to deduct for-profit activity expenses of the trust, such as trustee commissions and administrative expenses.⁷⁹⁶ However, a grantor is not allowed to deduct amounts paid by a trust merely because the trust is not recognized as a partner of the grantor for income tax purposes.⁷⁹⁷ The allocation of grantor trust deductions to grantors under §671 is described in III.C.3., below, and is discussed in detail in 819 T.M., Grantor Trusts: Income Taxation Under Subpart E (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

k. Estates, Fiduciaries, and Beneficiaries

In Estate of Windsberg v. Commissioner,⁷⁹⁸ the court held that the executor of his parent's estate was not allowed to deduct on his individual income tax return as trade or business expenses the administration expenses of the estate, because the deductions were those of the estate.⁷⁹⁹ The IRS has similarly ruled with respect to the deduction by the administrator of administration expenses as for-profit activity expenses.⁸⁰⁰ The same principle applies to the fiduciary's deduction of the estate's litigation expenses⁸⁰¹ and the expense of contesting deficiencies asserted with respect to the decedent's income tax liability.⁸⁰²

l. Individual's Payment of Another Person's Expenses

(1) In General

Generally, an individual is not allowed to deduct the trade or business expenses of another individual or unrelated corporation.⁸⁰³ Thus, a taxpayer is not allowed to deduct for-profit activity expenses paid on behalf of a friend.⁸⁰⁴ An individual is not allowed to deduct the expenses of operating rental property, the title to which is in the names of the individual's children because the individual is not obligated to pay those expenses.⁸⁰⁵

However, in one case a proprietor was allowed to deduct expenses of the proprietorship paid after the business was incorporated.⁸⁰⁶ In another case, a funeral home was allowed to deduct voluntary payment of the deficits of an insurance company formed to advertise the funeral home's business.⁸⁰⁷

(2) Expenses of Contesting Taxes

A taxpayer is allowed to deduct the expenses of contesting income tax deficiencies asserted against the taxpayer and a former spouse with respect to community income, but the taxpayer's current spouse is not allowed to deduct the expenses because the expenses relate to the community between the taxpayer and the former spouse and not the one between the taxpayer and the current spouse.⁸⁰⁸ A taxpayer is not allowed to deduct the expense of contesting a tax liability asserted against a former spouse, even if the taxpayer agrees to pay any liability and contest any deficiency.⁸⁰⁹

4. Interest

a. In General

Mortgage interest paid by a taxpayer is not deductible if the taxpayer is not liable on the loan secured by the mortgage and does not own any of the property on which the mortgage was given.⁸¹⁰ The taxpayer must prove the existence of personal liability or ownership of the property securing the mortgage.⁸¹¹ In Wusich v. Commissioner,⁸¹² the Tax Court rejected an IRS argument that no deduction should be allowed for interest paid by the taxpayer on principal payments made to a bonding company under an agreement by which the taxpayer agreed to indemnify the bonding company for payments made by the bonding company to a bank under the indemnity bond.⁸¹³

b. Personal Liability

(1) In General

Otherwise deductible interest paid by the taxpayer on a loan with respect to which the taxpayer alone is personally liable is deductible by the taxpayer.⁸¹⁴ Otherwise deductible interest paid by a parent on a loan made to a child is deductible by the parent if the parent cosigned the note,⁸¹⁵ but not if the parents do not make, co-make, or endorse the note.⁸¹⁶ The parent's mere promise to the borrower to make the payments is insufficient.⁸¹⁷ However, a taxpayer who is not obligated to the lender but who assumes liability on the mortgage in exchange for a part interest in the property securing the mortgage is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest.⁸¹⁸

If the taxpayer does not prove personal liability on a loan nor the use of his or her property to secure the loan, no deduction is allowed.⁸¹⁹ No deduction is allowed for the payment of interest by the taxpayer on a loan secured by another person's property and on which the taxpayer is not liable.⁸²⁰ However, in Belden v. Commissioner,⁸²¹ the Tax Court held that a taxpayer was allowed to deduct interest paid to a builder to cover a construction loan even though the taxpayer did not yet have legal title to the property and was not directly obligated on the loan.

It does not matter that the taxpayer pays the interest with funds provided by another person for that purpose.⁸²² This principle has been applied to disallow a deduction by a child of interest paid on a mortgage on which the parent but not the child was liable.⁸²³

A tenant is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest paid on a loan made to the tenant by the landlord even after the tenant assigns the lease to a corporation, if the assignment does not relieve the tenant of liability on the loan.⁸²⁴ In Thomas v. Commissioner,⁸²⁵ the Board of Tax Appeals held that the taxpayer was not allowed to deduct interest on a loan secured by property purchased by the taxpayer for relatives because the taxpayer was not liable on the loan and did not have title to the property.⁸²⁶

Taxpayers who pay interest on loans secured by property transferred by the taxpayers to trustees, but who are not relieved of their personal liability on the loans, are allowed to deduct the interest if under state law they remain primarily liable on the loans.⁸²⁷

(2) Guarantees

A taxpayer who pays interest on a loan made to another person is not allowed to deduct the interest merely because the taxpayer guarantees the loan.⁸²⁸ However, if the taxpayer becomes personally liable on the debt, otherwise deductible interest accruing thereafter and paid by the taxpayer is deductible.⁸²⁹

(3) Transferee Liability Situations

A taxpayer who is liable as a transferee for a tax liability is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest that accrues on the liability after the transfer of the transferor's assets to the transferee.⁸³⁰ Similarly, the transferees are not allowed an interest deduction for their payment of interest accruing before the transfer, because that interest is the obligation of the transferor and its payment by the transferees is treated as a capital loss as is the payment of the underlying tax obligation.⁸³¹

It does not matter that the transferee agreed with the transferor to pay the deficiency, without specific mention of the interest, if the interest accrues after the transfer of the assets.⁸³² It does not matter that the transferor pays on behalf of the transferee the interest accruing after the transfer, because the transferor in that situation is acting as the transferee's agent.⁸³³

Otherwise deductible interest on an estate tax deficiency that accrues after the estate distributes its assets and that is paid by the distributee is deductible by the distributee.⁸³⁴ If the distributees are not liable for a tax deficiency because it is only a lien against the property, no deduction is allowed to them when they pay the interest.⁸³⁵

The transferee liability principle does not apply to a spouse who is sole heir of the decedent spouse and personal representative of the decedent spouse's estate if the surviving spouse is not a transferee.⁸³⁶

(4) Joint Liability

The fact that the taxpayer is jointly liable on a debt does not preclude the taxpayer from deducting all otherwise deductible interest paid by the taxpayer on the debt.⁸³⁷ Thus, a co-maker of a note is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest paid with respect to the note.⁸³⁸ A taxpayer who is jointly responsible for the payment of withholding taxes is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest on unpaid taxes.⁸³⁹

If the taxpayer remains personally liable on a mortgage bond, the fact that the transferee of the property securing the mortgage executes a new bond and becomes jointly liable does not make the taxpayer's otherwise deductible interest nondeductible.⁸⁴⁰ Equal partners who guarantee a note are allowed to deduct their proportionate shares of otherwise deductible interest that they pay.⁸⁴¹ Each of several affiliated corporations jointly and severally liable on a tax deficiency arising from a consolidated return is allowed to deduct the interest on the deficiency to the extent allocated among themselves in a reasonable, fair, and equitable manner.⁸⁴²

(5) Spouses

A spouse is not allowed to deduct on a separate return interest paid on the debt of the other spouse.⁸⁴³ However, if the liability is joint, either spouse who pays otherwise deductible interest with respect to the liability is allowed to deduct it.⁸⁴⁴ If payment is made with community funds, each spouse is treated as having paid one-half of the interest.⁸⁴⁵

If joint property is used to pay otherwise deductible interest on a loan on which the spouses are jointly liable, each spouse is entitled to deduct one-half of the interest.⁸⁴⁶ If one spouse pays the interest with his or her own funds,⁸⁴⁷ that spouse is entitled to any deduction.⁸⁴⁸ It does not matter that the loan is secured by the other spouse's property.⁸⁴⁹ In a state in which one spouse is entitled to possession of, and proceeds from the sale of, property held as tenants by the entirety, that spouse is allowed to deduct all of the otherwise deductible accrued interest paid by a purchaser of the property who agrees to transfer a portion of the sales proceeds directly to the mortgagee.⁸⁵⁰

A spouse cannot make interest paid on the other spouse's debt deductible merely by becoming a guarantor with respect to the debt.⁸⁵¹ A taxpayer is not allowed to deduct interest paid by a former spouse on a debt for which the taxpayer remains jointly and severally liable merely by alleging that funds provided by the taxpayer to the former spouse were used to make the payment.⁸⁵² Also, no deduction is allowed to the taxpayer if the former spouse is liable for the debt and the taxpayer provides funds from which the former spouse pays the interest.⁸⁵³ The deduction is allowed if the taxpayer is primarily liable on the debt and the divorce decree requires the taxpayer to provide the funds for that purpose.⁸⁵⁴ The Tax Court has allowed a former husband to deduct a portion of his former wife's share of interest on a joint debt that he paid using his separate funds, even though community funds remained, because the former wife's bankruptcy made it unlikely the taxpayer would be reimbursed.⁸⁵⁵

c. Indebtedness Secured by Taxpayer's Property

(1) In General

A taxpayer is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest on a loan secured by a mortgage on the taxpayer's property even if the taxpayer is not otherwise liable on the note.⁸⁵⁶ The taxpayer's method of accounting does not matter.⁸⁵⁷ This principle applies even if the taxpayer transfers title to secure the loan instead of granting a mortgage.⁸⁵⁸ Interest paid to release a lien on the taxpayer's condemned real property is deductible by the taxpayer.⁸⁵⁹

(2) Beneficial or Equitable Ownership

A taxpayer is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest on a mortgage secured by property that the taxpayer transfers to another person if the taxpayer can demonstrate that the taxpayer has retained a beneficial interest in the property.⁸⁶⁰ The same conclusion applies to a taxpayer who acquires equitable or beneficial interest in property, but not legal title, and who pays interest on a loan secured by the taxpayer's interest in the property.⁸⁶¹ In Uslu v. Commissioner,⁸⁶² a married couple was held to have acquired an equitable interest in property legally owned by the husband's brother and his wife, because they made all of the interest payments, lived in the home, paid for all the other expenses without contribution from the brother and his wife, were the donees of an unrecorded quitclaim deed for the property, and would be liable if the brother and his wife sued them for not making interest payments. In Hodgkins v. Commissioner,⁸⁶³ the Tax Court held that no deduction was available to taxpayers who held legal title, but who made no payments and who transferred the benefits and burdens of ownership in exchange for consideration.

A taxpayer obtains beneficial ownership when the taxpayer takes possession and assumes the benefits and burdens of ownership.⁸⁶⁴ Thus, if the seller retains legal title to secure installment payments of the purchase price by the purchaser, the purchaser is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest on the indebtedness owed to the seller.⁸⁶⁵ A taxpayer does not become equitable owner merely by making an earnest money deposit on the property.⁸⁶⁶ However, a purchaser who assumes liability on a land sales contract and takes legal title after making all of the contractually required payments can readily demonstrate acquisition of beneficial ownership.⁸⁶⁷ The Fourth Circuit reversed a Tax Court decision holding that benefits and burdens do not shift to a purchaser if the seller retains primary responsibility for making the interest payments, even though those payments correlate to the additional interest payments that the seller must make and even though at final settlement the purchaser is responsible for reimbursing the seller for taxes accrued from the original settlement date.⁸⁶⁸

No deduction is allowed for advances made by the taxpayer to the owner of record to pay the interest.⁸⁶⁹

(3) Condominiums

Owners of units in a condominium are allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest paid on loans secured by mortgages on their interests in the condominium even though they do not own the property in fee simple.⁸⁷⁰

(4) Life Insurance Policies

An assignee of a life insurance policy is not allowed to deduct interest paid by the assignee which accrued on a policy loan made to the assignor before the assignment.⁸⁷¹ Interest paid by the assignee and accruing after the assignment is deductible by the assignee if it is otherwise deductible.⁸⁷² The assignors are not allowed to deduct interest on policy loans paid by the assignors and accruing after the assignment, if the assignors' obligations with respect to the loans terminate when the policies are assigned.⁸⁷³

d. Sellers and Purchasers

A seller is not allowed to deduct a loan discount paid to a money lender in order to assist the purchaser in obtaining a mortgage to finance the purchase, because the purchaser and not the seller is liable on the mortgage.⁸⁷⁴ Likewise, a purchaser of property is not allowed to deduct mortgage interest accrued before legal or equitable title passes, because the interest accrued on the seller's liability.⁸⁷⁵ A second mortgagee is not allowed to deduct interest paid on the first mortgage after the commencement of foreclosure proceedings on the second mortgage and before the foreclosure sale, because the payments are made to acquire title.⁸⁷⁶

e. Corporations and Shareholders

(1) Corporation's Interest Paid by Shareholder

Shareholders are not allowed to deduct interest paid by them on the corporation's indebtedness.⁸⁷⁷ It does not matter, with respect to interest attributable to the period during which only the corporation is liable, that the shareholder guarantees the loan for the period during which only the corporation is liable,⁸⁷⁸ or becomes personally liable to the creditor when the corporation defaults.⁸⁷⁹ Nor does it matter that the loan proceeds are used for the shareholder's personal benefit.⁸⁸⁰ The same principles apply to any discount on a corporate draft drawn on the shareholder.⁸⁸¹ Nor can a shareholder deduct interest owed by the corporation as a trade or business expense if there is no relationship between the shareholder's trade or business and the interest payment.⁸⁸²

Whether the indebtedness is an indebtedness of the corporation, rather than that of the shareholder, is a question of fact.⁸⁸³ Thus, interest payments made by a shareholder on a mortgage owed by the corporation are not deductible by the shareholder.⁸⁸⁴ Indebtedness of the corporation guaranteed by the shareholders is not indebtedness of the shareholders.⁸⁸⁵ However, if in substance the loan is the primary responsibility of the shareholders, though made directly to the corporation by the lender, the interest paid by the shareholders is interest on their own indebtedness.⁸⁸⁶

Generally, the indebtedness is not treated as the shareholders' merely by disregarding the corporation's existence.⁸⁸⁷ Thus, the shareholder is not allowed to deduct interest on the corporation's indebtedness even if the corporation is formed only to obtain financing for the shareholder's projects, because the corporation's separate existence and its business activity of obtaining financing must be recognized.⁸⁸⁸ The same result is reached

even if the corporation is formed solely to limit the shareholder's liability and to permit proportionate property ownership.⁸⁸⁹

However, the Tax Court has held that if the corporation is formed solely to avoid usury laws and immediately reloans the amount it borrows to the shareholder, the shareholder is allowed to deduct the interest paid on the loan from the corporation.⁸⁹⁰ If there is no loan from the corporation to the shareholder, interest paid by the shareholder on the loan to the corporation is not deductible by the shareholder.⁸⁹¹ The corporation is not treated as a shell if it continues to own and operate its assets after the financing transaction.⁸⁹²

In one case, the court allowed the shareholder to deduct interest on residential property placed in the name of a corporation solely for title transfer convenience purposes.⁸⁹³ In another case, the court reached the same result principally because the shareholder and the corporation treated the property as belonging to the shareholder in their transactions with other persons.⁸⁹⁴

In Stoneking v. Commissioner,⁸⁹⁵ the Tax Court allowed a shareholder to deduct interest on money borrowed by the shareholder from a third party and used to pay loans of the corporation on which she was a guarantor, because the loan was actually made to the shareholder and its proceeds constructively contributed by her to the corporation.⁸⁹⁶ If the shareholders become personally liable on a debt of the corporation that they guaranteed, otherwise deductible interest accruing after they become liable and that is paid by them is deductible,⁸⁹⁷ but interest attributable to before they become liable is not.⁸⁹⁸ Thus, if after the bankruptcy of the corporation, the shareholders have a direct and fixed obligation to pay the loan, without recourse against the corporation, the otherwise deductible interest paid by the shareholders is deductible by them.⁸⁹⁹

Similarly, in Leward Cotton Mills, Inc. v. Commissioner,⁹⁰⁰ the court held that shareholders who sold their stock and agreed to indemnify the corporation and the purchasers against any undisclosed liability were allowed to deduct interest on taxes subsequently assessed against the corporation.⁹⁰¹ Shareholders who become primarily liable under transferee liability provisions for the payment of taxes not paid by the corporation are allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest on those taxes that they pay.⁹⁰²

Interest on corporate indebtedness paid by the shareholders is treated as a contribution by them to the capital of the corporation.⁹⁰³

(2) Shareholder's Interest Paid by Corporation

A corporation is not allowed to deduct interest paid on the shareholder's indebtedness.⁹⁰⁴ This principle applies even if the shareholder incurred the loan in order to purchase the corporation's property.⁹⁰⁵ However, a corporation is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest on its own indebtedness.⁹⁰⁶

Whether indebtedness is the corporation's or shareholder's is a question of fact.⁹⁰⁷ Thus, a corporation was allowed to deduct interest on a loan incurred by the corporation in its name and in its capacity, the security for which was some or all of the corporation's assets, even though the corporation loaned the borrowed proceeds to its shareholders.⁹⁰⁸ Likewise, a corporation is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest on a loan secured by a mortgage on property titled in the name of a shareholder if the corporation is equitable owner of the property and the shareholder holds title as an accommodation.⁹⁰⁹ If a corporation is recognized as an independent entity, it, and not the shareholder, is allowed to deduct the interest on debt for which the corporation is liable because the debt is a debt of the corporation.⁹¹⁰

In contrast, interest paid by a corporation on a shareholder's obligation to a former spouse incurred as part of a property settlement is not deductible by the corporation.⁹¹¹ Similarly, a corporation is not allowed to deduct as a trade or business expense interest that it pays on a loan obtained by it and a shareholder to finance the shareholder's purchase of stock from a third person.⁹¹²

In United States v. Barwin Realty Co.,⁹¹³ the U.S. District Court for the Eastern District of New York rejected an attempt to create an interest deduction for a corporation through a series of circular transactions that ostensibly created indebtedness secured by the corporation's property but with respect to which the corporation was not liable.⁹¹⁴ The court held that the corporation was a dummy formed to evade state laws for the convenience of the shareholders, that no valid corporate indebtedness was created by the transactions, and that amounts paid as interest to the shareholders on the alleged corporate debt were not deductible even though creditors were entitled to otherwise deductible interest payments with respect to the debts secured by the property and with respect to which the shareholders were personally liable.⁹¹⁵

(3) Officer's Interest Paid by Corporation

A corporation is not allowed to deduct interest that it pays on a loan made to one of its officers by a third party, even though it promised to pay the interest when the officer transferred to it property acquired with the proceeds of the loan.⁹¹⁶

(4) Corporation's Payment of Interest on Subsidiary's Debt

A corporation is not allowed to deduct its payment of interest owed by its subsidiary, because the payment is a capital expenditure⁹¹⁷ by the corporation to protect its investment in the subsidiary.⁹¹⁸ The same result is reached even if the interest is paid with respect to a debt of the subsidiary that the parent corporation guaranteed.⁹¹⁹ However, if the parent becomes liable with respect to the debt, such as assuming the debt when the subsidiary is merged into it, the parent is allowed to deduct the interest that it pays.⁹²⁰

(5) Subsidiary's Payment of Parent Corporation's Debt

A subsidiary is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest paid with respect to a loan made to the subsidiary but subsequently assumed by the parent under conditions obligating the subsidiary to continue paying the interest.⁹²¹

(6) Corporation's Payment of Interest on Predecessor's Debt

A corporation is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible interest on a debt of its predecessor with respect to which it assumes liability.⁹²²

f. Landlords and Tenants

A lessee is not allowed to deduct interest paid on outstanding installment obligations incurred by the lessor when the lessor acquired the property under lease because the lessee is not obligated to make the interest payments.⁹²³

g. Trusts, Fiduciaries, and Beneficiaries

Trust beneficiaries are not allowed to deduct interest paid on the trust's debts if they are not liable on the debt and their property does not secure the debt.⁹²⁴ It does not matter if the beneficiary is a guarantor of the debt.⁹²⁵

h. Partners and Partnerships

Partners are allowed to deduct their allocable portion of otherwise deductible interest payments made on a loan to the partnership, even though the partnership distributed the loan proceeds to a corporation of which the partners were shareholders.⁹²⁶ Advances to a syndicate for purposes of its paying interest are not deductible by the person making the advance.⁹²⁷

5. Taxes

a. In General

(1) Imposition of Economic Burden of the Tax

Generally, taxes are deductible only by the taxpayer upon whom they are imposed.⁹²⁸ The critical determination is not whether the taxpayer is the person on whom the tax is nominally imposed, but whether the burden of the tax is borne by the taxpayer.⁹²⁹ In Peterman v. Commissioner,⁹³⁰ for example, a taxi driver was not permitted to deduct taxes collected from passengers and remitted to the driver's employer because the taxes were not imposed on the driver.⁹³¹ In a similar type of case, Arrigoni v. Commissioner,⁹³² the court held that an employer is not entitled to deduct state income taxes withheld from employees' pay because the tax is imposed on the employee and not the employer, who is acting as the state's "collection agent" in withholding the taxes.⁹³³

In Farnsworth v. Commissioner,⁹³⁴ the Third Circuit held that a former partner of a dissolved partnership was not allowed to deduct state taxes imposed on the partnership to the extent of the fractional shares of the other partners because the partner voluntarily renounced the right to contribution from the other partners of a tax for which they were jointly and severally liable.⁹³⁵

(2) Effect of Contract

A taxpayer who pays the income taxes of another company without being contractually obligated to do so is not allowed to deduct those taxes as a cost of earning income from a contract with that other company to sell and service its products.⁹³⁶

b. Payment Through Agent

The tax may be paid through an agent. Thus, in Hradesky v. Commissioner,⁹³⁷ the court held that a mortgagor who paid amounts into escrow with the mortgagee was entitled to deduct real estate taxes paid by the mortgagee on the mortgagor's behalf when the mortgagee paid the taxes; the fact that the mortgagor was contractually compelled to pay the taxes to the mortgagee did not make the tax deductible when paid to the mortgagee.⁹³⁸ In Galt v. Commissioner,⁹³⁹ the same result was reached with respect to voluntary payments into an escrow account.⁹⁴⁰ In Peters v. Commissioner,⁹⁴¹ the court permitted the taxpayer to deduct real estate taxes paid by third party intermediaries because the taxes were the taxpayer's obligation and the payments were made specifically for the purpose of paying the taxes.⁹⁴²

Comment: A taxpayer may lose the deduction if the documentation fails to demonstrate that the taxpayer's agent paid the taxes on behalf of the taxpayer.

In Howlett v. Commissioner,⁹⁴³ the taxpayer was not permitted to deduct purported tax payments made to a company managing properties that the taxpayer had an option to purchase because the taxpayer failed to show that the payments were made for real estate tax purposes or that the manager ever paid any part of the payments to the taxing jurisdiction.⁹⁴⁴ Similarly, in Schultz v. Commissioner,⁹⁴⁵ the taxpayer prepaid Kentucky ad valorem taxes incident to the purchase of bulk whiskey, but made the payment to the seller and did not prove that the funds were remitted to the state.⁹⁴⁶

In Johnson v. Commissioner,⁹⁴⁷ the court held that a husband was not permitted, under §164, to deduct real estate taxes paid by his estranged wife, who was the sole owner of the property.⁹⁴⁸

c. Payment on Behalf of Corporations

Under the general rule, a parent corporation is not permitted to deduct taxes it pays on behalf of a subsidiary.⁹⁴⁹ In El Paso Nat'l Bank v. United States,⁹⁵⁰ a parent corporation was not permitted to deduct property taxes paid by it but which were imposed on the property of its subsidiary even though it was paying the taxes on behalf of itself as a shareholder.⁹⁵¹ Similarly, in Rink v. Commissioner,⁹⁵² a shareholder was not permitted to deduct the corporation's taxes paid by the shareholder.⁹⁵³

In Young v. Commissioner,⁹⁵⁴ the court held that no deduction was allowed for a taxpayer who paid real property taxes owed by an unrelated corporation, even though the corporation subsequently transferred the properties to business entities in which the taxpayer had interests.⁹⁵⁵

d. Real Property

Generally, only the owner of real property is entitled to deduct real property taxes⁹⁵⁶ on the property because those taxes are the liability⁹⁵⁷ of the owner.⁹⁵⁸ In Cramer v. Commissioner,⁹⁵⁹ the court denied the deduction to a taxpayer who paid real estate taxes on property in which the taxpayer had no present interest.⁹⁶⁰ However, it should be noted that where one taxpayer gratuitously pays the real property taxes for another taxpayer who actually owns the real property, the taxpayer who owns the property would be entitled to the deduction for the real estate taxes paid on the property.⁹⁶¹

In order to deduct real property taxes, the obligation for the payment must arise from an interest in the property and not from a contractual relationship with a third party. In Macdonald v. Commissioner,⁹⁶² the court held that the taxpayer could not deduct real estate taxes on his aunt's property paid under court order, because the taxpayer's obligation being enforced by the court order was an agreement to let him live rent-free in the property provided he paid the expenses, and the taxpayer did not own the property.⁹⁶³ In contrast, in Willamette Valley Lumber Co. v. United States,⁹⁶⁴ the court held that the taxpayer could deduct ad valorem taxes on land and timber which it had obligated itself to pay under a contract to purchase the timber, because under state law the contractual obligation justified regarding the taxpayer as "owner" of the land even though the taxes were paid by the seller and billed to the taxpayer.⁹⁶⁵ However, in Small v. Commissioner,⁹⁶⁶ the court held that the taxpayer's obligation under an agreement with the taxpayer's mortgagee-creditor to guarantee payment of the taxes was insufficient to permit the taxpayer to deduct the taxes,⁹⁶⁷ and in Kohlsaat v. Commissioner,⁹⁶⁸ the same result was reached with respect to a taxpayer who agreed in a separation agreement to pay taxes imposed on property owned by the taxpayer's spouse.⁹⁶⁹

Two revenue rulings demonstrate the significance of the legal incidence of the tax. In Rev. Rul. 64-327, the IRS ruled that Hawaii real estate taxes imposed on a lessee of Hawaiian real property who holds the property under a lease of at least 15 years are deductible by the lessee; the Hawaii statutes were subsequently amended to provide that the tax was the liability of the lessee.⁹⁷⁰ In Rev. Rul. 75-301, the IRS ruled that even though a landlord was permitted to pass real estate tax increases onto tenants under a rent control ordinance, the tenants were not allowed to deduct the "tax surcharge" because the real estate taxes remained the liability of the landlord, and the tenants were not paying the taxes as such to preserve their beneficial interests.

However, a taxpayer who owns a beneficial interest in property and who pays taxes thereon to protect that interest may deduct the taxes, assuming they are deductible taxes, even though legal title is in another.⁹⁷¹ In Rev. Rul. 67-21, the IRS ruled that a taxpayer who transferred his residence to a church, reserving a term interest and agreeing to pay real property taxes during the term, was permitted to deduct the taxes paid by him during the term.⁹⁷² In Rev. Rul. 73-531, the IRS ruled that real estate taxes imposed on and paid by a taxpayer with a terminable life estate in certain real property of his employer were deductible by the taxpayer.⁹⁷³ In Rev. Rul. 74-408, the IRS ruled that foreign real property taxes imposed on the taxpayer entitled to the beneficial but not legal ownership of a condominium were deductible by the taxpayer even though legal title was in a trust.⁹⁷⁴ In Powell v. Commissioner,⁹⁷⁵ the court held that a taxpayer owning an undivided one-sixth interest in property owned in tenancy-in-common with her siblings and paying the entire real property tax imposed on the property was entitled to deduct the tax because under Texas law the taxpayer's interest would be extinguished if only one-sixth of the tax were paid. The court described the test as whether the taxpayer by paying the tax satisfied a personal liability or protected a personal right or beneficial interest in the property.⁹⁷⁶ In Rev. Rul. 68-84, the IRS ruled that a lessee of real property whose name is placed on the tax rolls as co-assessee with the owner may deduct real estate taxes paid by the lessee.⁹⁷⁷

Statutory provisions affecting the deduction of real property taxes by sellers and purchasers of real estate are described in III.C.5., below.

e. Spouses

In Buff v. Commissioner,⁹⁷⁸ the court held that a real estate tax paid by a taxpayer on a home owned solely by the taxpayer's spouse was not deductible by the taxpayer on a separate return.⁹⁷⁹ In Rev. Rul. 71-268, the IRS had ruled that if property is held by spouses as tenants by the entirety and they file separate returns, each may deduct only that portion he or she actually pays.⁹⁸⁰ The Tax Court has allowed a former husband to deduct a portion of his former wife's share of property taxes that he paid using his separate funds, even though community funds remained, because the former wife's bankruptcy made it unlikely the taxpayer would be reimbursed.⁹⁸¹

With respect to state income taxes, the IRS in Rev. Rul. 74-486,⁹⁸² set forth three principles concerning the deduction of state income taxes by spouses who file separate federal or state income tax returns. First, if the spouses file separate federal and state income tax returns, each spouse deducts on his or her federal return the state income tax he or she pays.⁹⁸³ Second, if the spouses file separate state income tax returns and a joint federal income tax return, the spouses deduct the sum of the state income taxes each pays.⁹⁸⁴ In Rev. Rul. 75-47, the IRS amplified this principle by ruling that it does not matter which spouse actually pays the state income taxes.⁹⁸⁵ Third, if the spouses file a joint state income tax return and separate federal income tax returns, each spouse deducts the portion of the state income tax paid that the gross income of each spouse bears to combined gross income, but not more than the tax actually paid by the spouse.⁹⁸⁶ However, if the spouses are jointly and severally liable for the state income tax, the amount paid by each spouse is deductible by each spouse.⁹⁸⁷

f. Trusts and Estates

In Clough v. Commissioner,⁹⁸⁸ the court held that an income tax imposed on an estate was not deductible by the testamentary trust that paid it.⁹⁸⁹ In Goldberg v. Commissioner,⁹⁹⁰ the court held that an income tax imposed on an estate was not deductible by the legatee who paid it.⁹⁹¹

g. Banks and Depositors

In Rev. Rul. 69-497, the IRS ruled that a Rhode Island tax imposed on customer deposits in banks is deductible by the depositor, assuming the account is used in carrying on a trade or business or in a for-profit activity, if the bank elects to pay the tax without seeking reimbursement; the depositor, of course, also must recognize gross income as a consequence of the bank's decision to forego reimbursement, and the bank is entitled to a §162 deduction.⁹⁹² In Rev. Rul. 77-418,⁹⁹³ the IRS ruled that a bank paying the taxes of a depositor must waive its right to reimbursement in order to deduct the tax under §162, and that the depositor must recognize gross income and is allowed a deduction under §164.⁹⁹⁴ The IRS suspended this ruling in 1979 when the state law was changed to impose the tax on the financial institution, thus permitting a §164 deduction by the institution.⁹⁹⁵

Observation: In view of the ruling in Rev. Rul. 77-418, it appears that the corporation should formally waive any right to reimbursement by the shareholder even though the statute and the regulations do not so require.

h. Substantiation

In order to sustain the deduction of a tax paid by the taxpayer, the taxpayer must prove that the tax was imposed on the taxpayer or borne by the taxpayer and not by some other person. In Buff v. Commissioner,⁹⁹⁶ and Moyer v. Commissioner,⁹⁹⁷ the courts denied a deduction for taxes, because the taxpayer failed to demonstrate that he paid the taxes or was legally responsible for their payment.⁹⁹⁸ In Johnson v. Commissioner,⁹⁹⁹ the Tax Court extended the principle in holding that the taxpayer did not prove that the taxes were imposed on him merely because his separation agreement with his wife required him to pay real estate taxes on a home solely owned by her.¹⁰⁰⁰ In Von Tersch v. Commissioner,¹⁰⁰¹ the court denied a deduction for personal property taxes despite the taxpayer's testimony that he paid them; the court had advised the taxpayer during the trial to write to the tax assessor for the records, but the court never received any information from the taxpayer.¹⁰⁰²

6. Losses

a. In General

Losses that are otherwise deductible are deductible only by the taxpayer who incurs the loss.¹⁰⁰³ Thus, in Medeiros v. Commissioner,¹⁰⁰⁴ a taxpayer who entered into a conditional oral agreement to acquire the stock of a corporation, and who paid the corporation's penalty for failure to withhold employment taxes, was not allowed to deduct the payment as a loss, because the taxpayer was not an officer, director, employee, or shareholder of the corporation and thus did not have a relationship that imposed any obligation on the taxpayer to bear the burden of the loss.¹⁰⁰⁵

b. Lack of Ownership

(1) In General

A taxpayer is not allowed to deduct losses arising from the destruction of property or damage to property unless the taxpayer owns the property.¹⁰⁰⁶ Thus, one spouse is not allowed to deduct losses arising with respect to the other spouse's property.¹⁰⁰⁷ Similarly, a parent is not allowed to deduct losses with respect to a child's property.¹⁰⁰⁸ However, the Fourth Circuit and the Tax Court have held that this restriction does not apply to a parent for losses with respect to property necessary for the support of a child whom the parent has a legal obligation to support.¹⁰⁰⁹

A taxpayer is not allowed to deduct as a loss the amount of damages caused by the taxpayer to another person's property.¹⁰¹⁰ An S corporation shareholder is not allowed to deduct losses arising from damage to property not owned by the shareholder or by the S corporation.¹⁰¹¹

A taxpayer who knowingly purchases stolen property, and thus is not the legal owner, is not entitled to claim a loss deduction when the property is confiscated by authorities.¹⁰¹² Losses with respect to property owned by a shareholder and purportedly included in the inventory of a corporation owned by the shareholder, but which does not deal in the type of property involved, are not deductible by the corporation.¹⁰¹³

(2) Property Under Contract of Sale

A taxpayer who owns legal title to property that is destroyed and who has entered into a contract to sell the property is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible losses arising from its destruction, because the taxpayer had the right to repurchase the property if the purchaser breached the contract.¹⁰¹⁴ Similarly, the purchaser is allowed to deduct the portion of the loss borne by the purchaser to the extent the purchaser assumes the risk of loss and has an equitable interest in the property.¹⁰¹⁵

(3) Determination of Ownership

The issue of whether the taxpayer owns the property is a factual one.¹⁰¹⁶ Otherwise deductible losses with respect to investments owned and controlled by the taxpayer, but placed into the names of the taxpayer's children, are deductible by the taxpayer.¹⁰¹⁷ A taxpayer to whom another person owes money does not own that other person's property absent a conveyance to the taxpayer, and thus the taxpayer is not allowed to deduct losses with respect to that property.¹⁰¹⁸

c. Corporations and Shareholders

(1) Corporate Activities

(a) Separate Business Operations

Shareholders are not allowed to deduct losses incurred by a corporation that is conducting its own business on its own behalf, except to the extent the losses pass through from an S corporation.¹⁰¹⁹ It does not matter that the losses are financed with loans advanced by the shareholders.¹⁰²⁰ A corporation that has its own bank account, uses its own name, holds itself out as a corporation, and conducts business activities is operating in a manner that strongly suggests the shareholders are not operating the business as partners,¹⁰²¹ and it does not matter that the corporation failed to file returns.¹⁰²² The same principles apply to losses incurred by a trust classified as an association for tax purposes.¹⁰²³

Otherwise deductible losses incurred by a corporation that is properly organized and operated as a separate entity are deductible by the corporation and not by those who form and own it.¹⁰²⁴ Thus, the shareholders of a corporation are not allowed to claim a loss deduction arising from the corporation's purchase of notes fraudulently made by third parties who did not intend to pay the notes, even though the corporation purchased the notes with money loaned to it by the shareholders.¹⁰²⁵ A shareholder is not permitted to claim a bad debt deduction for payments made on a corporate note on which the shareholder was not liable.¹⁰²⁶

(b) Separate Property and Assets

Shareholders are not allowed to claim a theft loss deduction arising from an officer's theft of corporate property¹⁰²⁷ or an officer's misappropriation of corporate funds.¹⁰²⁸ No deduction is allowed to the shareholder even if the theft of the corporate property causes a decline in the value of the shareholders' stock.¹⁰²⁹ Members of a tax-exempt incorporated club are not allowed to deduct a casualty loss arising from damage to the club's property.¹⁰³⁰

Shareholders are not allowed to deduct losses arising from the breach of a covenant not to compete executed in favor of the corporation.¹⁰³¹ Nor are they allowed to deduct losses arising from the expiration of an option held by the corporation.¹⁰³²

A corporation that assumes liability for a contract is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible losses arising from the contract.¹⁰³³ This is so even though the shareholders originally enter into the contract, provided the shareholders transfer the contract to the corporation and are relieved of all liability with respect to it.¹⁰³⁴

The dissolution of a corporation is not the same as the distribution of its assets, and until the distribution occurs, any deductible losses are those of the corporation.¹⁰³⁵

(c) Formalities of Incorporation

A shareholder is not allowed to deduct losses arising from the operation of a business by a corporation that fails to hold organizational meetings, if the corporation is incorporated and functioning as a separate entity before the losses are incurred.¹⁰³⁶ Technical noncompliance with incorporation statutes does not make a corporation's loss deductible by the shareholders if the corporation functions and operates as a viable separate entity.¹⁰³⁷ It does not matter that the corporation was formed merely to avoid usury laws.¹⁰³⁸ In contrast, if no assets of the business are transferred to the corporation and the corporation's name is not used in the daily operations of the business, the business is that of the shareholders and not of the corporation, and any otherwise deductible losses are deductible by the shareholders.¹⁰³⁹

(2) Shareholder Activities

(a) In General

A corporation is not allowed to deduct losses arising from the separate conduct of a trade or business by its shareholders.¹⁰⁴⁰ The fact that the trade or business is conducted on the corporation's premises does not in and of itself make the trade or business the corporation's or the loss deductible by the corporation.¹⁰⁴¹

A corporation is not allowed to deduct a loss arising from its payment of a third party's debt guaranteed by its shareholders.¹⁰⁴² Nor is a corporation allowed to deduct losses arising from the payment of a note endorsed by its shareholder in the shareholder's individual capacity.¹⁰⁴³ A corporation is not allowed to deduct a casualty loss arising from the destruction of property owned by a shareholder, even if the corporation advanced funds for its purchase.¹⁰⁴⁴

(b) Corporation as Conduit

If the corporation is a mere conduit for the conduct of the shareholder's activities, otherwise deductible losses are deductible by the shareholder and not the corporation.¹⁰⁴⁵ If the shareholder conducts the business, and the corporation's participation is minimal at best, any otherwise deductible loss is deductible by the shareholder.¹⁰⁴⁶ Likewise, if the corporation merely holds title to real property used by the shareholder in the shareholder's trade or business, the otherwise deductible losses from that business are deductible by the shareholder.¹⁰⁴⁷

Similar principles apply if the corporation is inactive and the shareholder does not transfer any of the business assets to it.¹⁰⁴⁸ If the shareholder continues to retain ownership of the assets and continues to operate the business, it does not matter that the corporate name is used.¹⁰⁴⁹

(c) Shareholder Assumption of Corporate Business

If a shareholder agrees to assume the corporation's business by assuming its obligations and acquiring rights to the income, the losses are deductible by the shareholder in carrying on the trade or business of performing services under the contract with the corporation.¹⁰⁵⁰ However, if the shareholder acts as an agent for the corporation, the shareholder is not entitled to deduct losses incurred by the corporation.¹⁰⁵¹

(3) Related Corporations

(a) Subsidiaries

A parent corporation is not allowed to deduct a loss arising from the sale of an asset by its wholly owned subsidiary.¹⁰⁵² It does not matter if the subsidiary is liquidated after incurring the loss.¹⁰⁵³ However, an otherwise deductible loss that arises after the liquidation is deductible by the parent if the parent is legally required to make the payment that generates the loss.¹⁰⁵⁴

If the subsidiary is formed merely to hold title to real property, then any deduction is the parent's.¹⁰⁵⁵ However, if the subsidiary is acting on its own behalf through the conduct of business activity in its own name, the parent is not allowed the deduction.¹⁰⁵⁶

If a subsidiary is acting as the parent's agent, then any otherwise deductible loss is deductible by the parent.¹⁰⁵⁷ However, this is not the case if the subsidiary is acting on its own behalf.¹⁰⁵⁸

(b) Reorganizations

In Prudential Loan Co. v. Commissioner,¹⁰⁵⁹ the Board of Tax Appeals held that a corporation was allowed to deduct a loss from the sale of an asset acquired in a reorganization, even though the corporation from which it acquired the asset had contracted for its sale.¹⁰⁶⁰ In Federation Bank & Trust Co. v. Commissioner,¹⁰⁶¹ the Tax Court held that a reorganized bank was allowed to deduct losses arising from the sale of assets acquired by the bank in the reorganization.¹⁰⁶²

d. Trusts and Estates

(1) Beneficiaries

The beneficiaries of a trust are not allowed to deduct losses incurred by the trust.¹⁰⁶³ The rationale is that the beneficiaries do not own the trust property, even though they have an interest in it.¹⁰⁶⁴ Until the trust terminates, the trust is entitled to any loss deductions.¹⁰⁶⁵

Note: Under §642(h), the termination of a trust or estate entitles the beneficiaries to deduct certain unused deductions of the trust or estate.¹⁰⁶⁶ The §642(h) deduction allowance is discussed in 852 T.M., Income Taxation of Trusts and Estates (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

(2) Grantors

Generally, grantors are not allowed to deduct losses incurred by a trust with respect to property conveyed to the trust.¹⁰⁶⁷ This principle does not apply to taxpayers who are, or who are treated as, grantors of grantor trusts.¹⁰⁶⁸ Grantor trusts are described in III.C.3.a., below, and are discussed in detail in 819 T.M., Grantor Trusts: Income Taxation Under Subpart E (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

(3) Decedents

Losses incurred in a business conducted by a taxpayer while alive are deducted on the taxpayer's final income tax return and not by the estate.¹⁰⁶⁹

e. Life Tenants

In Steinert v. Commissioner,¹⁰⁷⁰ the Tax Court held that a life tenant was allowed to deduct losses arising from a casualty to the property, to the extent of cleaning-up expenses and the portion of the loss allocable to the life interest.¹⁰⁷¹ In Bliss v. Commissioner,¹⁰⁷² the Second Circuit, in reversing the Tax Court, held that the entire amount of a casualty loss to the property was deductible by the life tenant because the facts and the will of the grantor demonstrated that no portion of the loss was borne by the holder of the remainder interest.¹⁰⁷³

f. Joint Owners

An otherwise deductible loss arising with respect to property held by taxpayers as joint owners is allocated among them in proportion to their ownership interests.¹⁰⁷⁴ Joint ownership does not exist if property is purchased by and held solely in the name of another taxpayer;¹⁰⁷⁵ nor does it exist if one of the two owners endorses it to the other owner before the taxable year in which the loss arises.¹⁰⁷⁶ An ownership arrangement that is in the form of joint ownership is not treated in that manner for tax purposes if the property is acquired by, operated by, and controlled by one person and the other person is named as owner merely for convenience.¹⁰⁷⁷

Otherwise deductible losses with respect to property that is held by spouses as tenants by the entirety are allocated one-half to each spouse.¹⁰⁷⁸ The fact that one spouse provided all the funds to acquire the property does not change this result.¹⁰⁷⁹

g. Lessors and Lessees

Generally, a lessee is not allowed to deduct a loss arising with respect to the leased property because the lessor is the owner.¹⁰⁸⁰ However, to the extent the lessee is obligated to bear the burden of the loss under the lease, the lessee is allowed to deduct the loss assuming it is otherwise deductible.¹⁰⁸¹ Thus, if a lessee, who is under an obligation to return the property in good order and condition, is held liable to the lessor for the amount of damage to the property, the lessee is allowed to deduct the loss to the extent it is otherwise deductible.¹⁰⁸²

7. Depreciation and §179 Expense Deductions

a. In General

(1) Burden of Risk of Economic Loss

The Supreme Court has held, in Weiss v. Weiner,¹⁰⁸³ that any otherwise deductible depreciation is allowable only to the taxpayer who is in a position to bear any economic loss that arises from any decrease in the value of the property.¹⁰⁸⁴ The Court noted that mere ownership under local law is insufficient in and of itself to entitle the owner to any depreciation deduction.¹⁰⁸⁵ The same principle applies to §179 expense deductions.¹⁰⁸⁶

(2) Capital Investment

No deduction for depreciation is allowed to a taxpayer if the taxpayer does not have a capital investment in the depreciable property.¹⁰⁸⁷ It does not matter that the taxpayer uses borrowed money to make the investment.¹⁰⁸⁸ A creditor with a security interest in property has not made a capital investment in that property,¹⁰⁸⁹ and this result is not changed even if the creditor becomes a mortgagee in possession.¹⁰⁹⁰ An owner of property that is stolen is not allowed to deduct depreciation because the property is not used by the owner in a trade or business or profit-seeking activity.¹⁰⁹¹

Comment: Because depreciation is allowed only to the taxpayer who bears the risk of loss and has made an investment in the property, the thief should not be allowed to claim depreciation deductions with respect to the stolen property.

(3) Rights to Income from Another's Property

In Miller v. Commissioner,¹⁰⁹² the Tax Court held that a taxpayer who acquired a development corporation's rights to payment under a leaseback of property leased by the corporation to a third party was not allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to the property because the capital investment was made by the third party, which bore the burden of any loss from depreciation.¹⁰⁹³ A taxpayer who acquires a right to net profits from a property is purchasing an intangible contractual right and not the property, and thus is precluded from claiming depreciation with respect to the property.¹⁰⁹⁴

A taxpayer who acquires a right to payments contingent on the success of property protected by copyright does not acquire the copyright and is not the taxpayer allowed to depreciate the copyright.¹⁰⁹⁵ The deduction is allowed to the seller, if the seller retains complete and exclusive control¹⁰⁹⁶ or if the ownership rights are immediately retransferred to the seller,¹⁰⁹⁷ and to a creditor if the copyright is assigned to the creditor.¹⁰⁹⁸ The purchaser is allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to the intangible contract right to the extent of the actual investment made in it.¹⁰⁹⁹

b. Loss of Ownership

(1) Governmental Seizure

No depreciation is allowed to the owner of record of property for the period between the date of condemnation and the date on which the governmental authority paid the condemnation proceeds.¹¹⁰⁰ No depreciation is allowed to a taxpayer for taxable years during which the property is in the possession of a governmental unit following a requisition order.¹¹⁰¹ Likewise, no depreciation deduction is allowed with respect to property forfeited to a governmental unit because it was used in illegal activities.¹¹⁰²

(2) Property Transferred to Public Use

No depreciation is allowed to a taxpayer with respect to property dedicated to public use.¹¹⁰³ However, a taxpayer is allowed to depreciate improvements made on its property even though it grants a right of way in the improvements to a governmental unit, provided the expenditures for the improvements benefit the taxpayer's other property.¹¹⁰⁴ Amounts paid for special assessments for public improvements are not depreciable by the taxpayer because the taxpayer has no ownership rights in the improvements.¹¹⁰⁵

c. Use by Others

The owner of record is not precluded from claiming any otherwise allowable depreciation deduction merely because other persons are using the property, if the owner bears the burden of any loss from the property's decline in value.¹¹⁰⁶ However, if the owner acquires the property in a transaction that includes a leaseback to the seller and the transaction is disregarded as a sham, the alleged owner is not allowed to claim the depreciation deduction.¹¹⁰⁷ The tax treatment of sales and leasebacks is discussed in detail in 593 T.M., Real Estate Leases.

A taxpayer who acquires property subject to a lease is allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to the property, even though not entitled to possession, because the benefits and burdens of ownership pass from the selling landlord to the taxpayer, but this principle does not apply if the taxpayer negotiates a purchase price that reflects the depreciated value of the property at the end of the existing lease.¹¹⁰⁸ Depreciation with respect to returnable containers is deductible by the seller of the goods shipped therein until the purchaser's failure to return the containers within the designated period is treated as a loss, provided title to the containers does not pass to the purchaser, deposits are accounted for separately, and sales invoices clearly state that the containers are the seller's property.¹¹⁰⁹

d. Placement on Property of Others

The owner of property is not precluded from claiming any otherwise allowable depreciation deduction merely because the property is located on land owned by another person.¹¹¹⁰

e. Property Owned by Others

A taxpayer who expects to purchase property in a subsequent taxable year is not allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to that property before the purchase.¹¹¹¹ A taxpayer who leases property with an option to purchase is not allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to that property before the option is exercised.¹¹¹² A taxpayer who has a contractual right to purchase property but who is not liable for the purchase price until the satisfaction or waiver of all conditions precedent is not allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to the property until the sale contract is executed.¹¹¹³ Accommodation purchasers are not allowed to claim depreciation because there is no intent to shift the benefits and burdens of ownership to them.¹¹¹⁴ A purchase has not occurred if the property is not transferred to the taxpayer, the taxpayer does not make payments to the seller, and the property has not yet been produced.¹¹¹⁵

In Hodgkins v. Commissioner,¹¹¹⁶ the Tax Court held that depreciation deductions were not allowable to taxpayers who held legal title, but who made no payments and who transferred the benefits and burdens of ownership in exchange for consideration. Similarly, a corporation is not permitted to deduct depreciation on properties that it transfers to purchasers because legal title was transferred, the transaction was structured as a sale, the purchasers paid taxes and insurance, the purchasers had the right to transfer or lease the properties, and the corporation's repurchase obligation did not cause it to retain the benefits and burdens of ownership.¹¹¹⁷

f. Corporations, Shareholders, and Subsidiaries

No depreciation deduction is allowed to a corporate shareholder with respect to corporate property used exclusively for corporate business,¹¹¹⁸ even if the shareholders hold security interests in the property.¹¹¹⁹ Likewise, the shareholder of a corporation is not allowed to deduct §179 expense deductions with respect to property acquired by and owned by the corporation.¹¹²⁰ A corporation is not allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to property owned by its shareholders.¹¹²¹ Merely providing funds to the shareholder does not cause the corporation to have a capital investment in property acquired by the shareholder with those funds.¹¹²² Likewise, making contributions toward the shareholder's expenses in operating the property does not give the corporation a capital investment in the property.¹¹²³

A subsidiary is allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to property owned by it, even though its parent may have received income from the subsidiary's business.¹¹²⁴ A successor corporation is not allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to leasehold improvements that it occupies and that were constructed by a predecessor corporation, if it does not acquire the leasehold, because it has not made any investment in the improvements.¹¹²⁵

g. Purchasers and Sellers

(1) In General

If the purchaser of property assumes the benefits and burdens of ownership, the purchaser, and not the seller, is entitled to any depreciation deduction, even if the seller retains title as security¹¹²⁶ or for advertising and promotional reasons.¹¹²⁷ If benefits and burdens are not transferred until the final closing, any depreciation deduction for the period between the preliminary closing and the final closing is allowable to the seller and not to the purchaser.¹¹²⁸

Thus, a taxpayer who acquires property, makes payments on the purchase mortgage, and is treated as owner is allowed to claim depreciation with respect to the property even though passage of title is delayed for legal reasons.¹¹²⁹ A taxpayer who obtains equitable ownership in property for substantially all of its entire life is allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to the property.¹¹³⁰

A taxpayer who leases property to another person under the terms of which the benefits and burdens of ownership pass to the tenant is not allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to the property because the transaction is treated as a sale.¹¹³¹

(2) Default and Rescission

However, if the purchaser defaults and abandons the property to the seller, the seller may claim any otherwise allowable depreciation deductions.¹¹³² If the purchaser sues for rescission, the seller cannot claim depreciation so long as the purchaser retains the benefits and burdens of ownership.¹¹³³

(3) Period Preceding Ownership

Similarly, no depreciation is allowed to a purchaser of property for the period preceding the date on which the property is transferred, in depreciated condition, to the purchaser.¹¹³⁴ No depreciation is allowed for the period before the benefits and burdens of ownership pass, even though the purchaser is in possession, because use and maintenance of property are incidents of possessory rights and not of ownership.¹¹³⁵

h. Lessors and Lessees

(1) In General

Generally, lessors and not lessees are the taxpayers entitled to claim depreciation deductions with respect to the leased property.¹¹³⁶ It does not matter that the lessee is required to maintain the property in good and safe condition.¹¹³⁷

(2) Shifting of Burden of Loss Risk to Lessee

However, the lessor is not allowed to claim depreciation deductions if the lessee is required to return the property in a condition that is the physical equivalent of the leased property at the inception of the lease.¹¹³⁸ Nor is the lessor allowed depreciation deductions if the lessee is required to return the property in first-class condition.¹¹³⁹

(3) Leasehold Improvements

Lessors are not allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to leasehold improvements of which they take possession at the end of a lease because they have not made any investment in them.¹¹⁴⁰ It does not matter that the lessor loans to the lessee the funds needed to pay for the improvements.¹¹⁴¹

Lessees are allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to improvements made by them so long as they retain an economic interest in the improvements, even if the property has been condemned.¹¹⁴² It does not matter if the lease is canceled if the lessee has possession of the improvements.¹¹⁴³

Note: Permitting the lessee to continue depreciating the improvements after the property has been condemned appears inconsistent with the weight of authority denying deductions to the owner after the date of condemnation.¹¹⁴⁴ The only possible distinction is that the lessee has full use of the improvements until settlement, whereas the owner loses the right to sell or lease as of the date of condemnation.

(4) Acquisition of Lessor's Interest by Lessee

If the lessee acquires the lessor's interest, the lessee is allowed to deduct any otherwise allowable depreciation with respect to the interest acquired.¹¹⁴⁵ Otherwise, the lessee has no capital investment in the property on which to base depreciation deductions.¹¹⁴⁶

i. Life Estates and Remainders

Under §167(d), depreciation deductions allowable with respect to property held by a life tenant with remainder to another person are allowed to the life tenant.¹¹⁴⁷ The holder of the remainder is not allowed to claim depreciation until the life tenant dies and the holder of the remainder becomes a fee simple owner.¹¹⁴⁸

Note: In contrast, for purposes of determining gain or loss from the disposition of the life estate, the life tenant is treated as though the adjusted basis in the life estate is zero.¹¹⁴⁹

If the life tenant transfers the life estate to the holder of the remainder, the life tenant is not allowed to claim depreciation deductions with respect to the transferred interest.¹¹⁵⁰ Otherwise allowable depreciation deductions with respect to improvements constructed by the life tenant are allowed to the life tenant.¹¹⁵¹

j. Trusts and Estates

Under §167(d), depreciation with respect to property held in trust must be apportioned between the income beneficiaries and the trustee in accordance with the terms of the governing instrument¹¹⁵² or, if there are no such terms, in proportion to the trust income allocated to the beneficiaries and trustee.¹¹⁵³ Depreciation with respect to property held by an estate must be apportioned between the estate and the heirs, legatees, and devisees in proportion to the estate income allocated to them.¹¹⁵⁴ Depreciation with respect to property transferred to a trust, the income from which is included in the gross income of the transferor under the grantor trust rules¹¹⁵⁵ must be apportioned to the transferor.¹¹⁵⁶

The depreciation allocated to a beneficiary may exceed the beneficiary's share of trust or estate income.¹¹⁵⁷ If all income is payable to the beneficiary, the depreciation deduction is allocated to the beneficiary even if in a particular year the trust has no income from the property.¹¹⁵⁸ It does not matter whether the beneficiary's share of the income is distributed or not.¹¹⁵⁹

The apportionment of depreciation between trustees and trust beneficiaries and between estates and beneficiaries is discussed in 856 T.M., Subchapter J — Throwback Rules (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

k. Determination of Taxpayer Entitled to Depreciation

The question of whether the taxpayer is the person entitled to depreciation with respect to a particular property is a question of fact.¹¹⁶⁰ Taxpayers claiming depreciation deductions bear the burden of showing that the burdens of ownership have passed to them¹¹⁶¹ and the burden of proving when that passage occurred.¹¹⁶² Thus, if a transfer of property to the taxpayer is a sham because there is no intent to transfer the benefits and burdens of ownership, the taxpayer is not allowed to deduct depreciation with respect to the property.¹¹⁶³

If the taxpayer does not have legal title to property, there is prima facie evidence that the taxpayer does not bear the burdens of ownership, and the taxpayer is not allowed to claim depreciation with respect to the property unless the taxpayer proves actual ownership.¹¹⁶⁴ A taxpayer who bears construction, insurance, and financing responsibilities can demonstrate actual ownership despite not having legal title.¹¹⁶⁵

If title to property is in the name of another person, who also has possession and use of the property, the taxpayer's burden of demonstrating actual ownership is almost impossible to satisfy.¹¹⁶⁶

Note: The IRS will usually not issue advance rulings on the question of who is entitled to claim depreciation on property if title is held by a party other than the formal owner, unless the holding of title is for security purposes.¹¹⁶⁷

8. Charitable Contribution Deductions

a. In General

A taxpayer is not allowed to deduct charitable contributions made by a dependent from gifts provided to the dependent by the taxpayer, because the contribution is a result of the dependent's independent determination with respect to the use of the funds.¹¹⁶⁸ The same principle applies to charitable contributions made by a spouse with funds provided by the taxpayer for the spouse's discretionary use.¹¹⁶⁹

b. Property Contributions

A taxpayer is allowed to deduct an otherwise eligible charitable contribution of property only if the taxpayer owns the donated property.¹¹⁷⁰ Thus, in Estate of Wasie v. Commissioner,¹¹⁷¹ the Tax Court held that a charitable contribution deduction for a contribution of trees to a qualified organization was allowed to a taxpayer who sold the land on which the trees stood, because the parties to the land sale contract did not intend that the trees be transferred to the land purchaser.¹¹⁷²

The taxpayer need not be in physical possession of the donated property nor is a formal conveyance at the time of donation required.¹¹⁷³ A taxpayer who acquires property and causes it to be transferred directly to the donee is not precluded from claiming an otherwise allowable deduction,¹¹⁷⁴ but the deduction is disallowed if the evidence suggests the taxpayer never owned the property and the donee acquired it other than through transfer by the taxpayer.¹¹⁷⁵ A taxpayer who sells property to a third party and retains title for security is allowed a charitable contribution deduction if the purchaser defaults and the property is donated to a qualified organization, because the taxpayer has legal and equitable title to the property.¹¹⁷⁶

c. Corporate Contributions

The shareholders of a corporation that makes a charitable contribution are not allowed to deduct it,¹¹⁷⁷ even if they signed the pledge card for the contribution, except to the extent the deduction flows through from an S corporation to the shareholders.¹¹⁷⁸

Note: The IRS takes the position that the shareholder is treated as having received a distribution only if property or economic benefit is received by the shareholder or family members.¹¹⁷⁹

A corporation is allowed to deduct otherwise deductible charitable contributions that it makes even if they are made pursuant to a plan permitting employees to designate the donee.¹¹⁸⁰

Note: The IRS takes the position that the employee does not realize gross income as a consequence of the donee designation.¹¹⁸¹

9. Medical Expense Deductions

A taxpayer whose transfer of income and expenses to a family trust is disregarded for federal income tax purposes is allowed to treat medical expenses paid by the trust as paid by the taxpayer.¹¹⁸² Otherwise deductible medical expenses paid by spouses out of separate funds are deductible by the spouse making the payment, but medical expenses paid out of community funds are deductible one-half by each spouse.¹¹⁸³ The spouse seeking the deduction bears the burden of demonstrating that the funds used were separate funds.¹¹⁸⁴

Where a mother directly paid the medical expenses of her daughter, the Tax Court held that the daughter is entitled to the medical expense deduction.¹¹⁸⁵ The court noted that pursuant to §2503(e)(1) and (2)(B), the mother did not have any gift tax consequences on the payment of these expenses because these payments were made to a "person who provides medical care ... with respect to [a donee]." However, according to the court, the income tax treatment is not controlled by the gift tax consequences. The court then applied the substance over form doctrine to treat the taxpayer as having received from her mother a gift of the amount paid for her medical expenses with which the taxpayer paid her own medical expenses.¹¹⁸⁶

10. Legal and Professional Fees

Parents who paid legal and professional fees incurred by their daughter in seeking a divorce are not deductible by the parents because the fees had no connection with the father's consulting activities, his agreement with his daughter concerning the fees did not shift the obligation to him, a portion of the fees related to the parents' attempt to obtain custody of their grandchild, and the expenses were nondeductible personal expenses regardless of who was obligated to pay the fees.¹¹⁸⁷

C. Statutory Provisions Relating to Assignment of Deductions

1. Related-Party Reallocation

a. IRS Reallocation of Deductions Among Related Parties

Under §482, the IRS has the power to distribute, apportion, or allocate deductions and other items between or among any two or more organizations, trades, or businesses owned or controlled directly or indirectly by the same interests, if it determines that distribution, apportionment, or allocation is necessary to prevent evasion of taxes or to reflect clearly the income ¹¹⁸⁵ Lang v. Commissioner, T.C. Memo 2010-286.

¹¹⁸⁶ Of course, had the mother actually given her daughter the money to pay the medical expenses or had merely reimbursed her daughter for those medical expenses, the mother would have been subject to the gift tax (to the extent that all of the mother's gifts to the daughter for that year exceeded the annual gift tax exclusion) as the exception for the payment of medical expenses applies only where the donor pays the medical expenses directly to the medical service provider. See Reg. §25.2503-6(c) Ex. 4.

of any of those organizations, trades, or businesses.¹¹⁸⁸ It does not matter whether the organizations, trades, or businesses are incorporated, organized in the United States, or affiliated.¹¹⁸⁹

The §482 adjustment power is discussed in detail in the Tax Management Transfer Pricing Portfolios (Foreign Income Series).

b. IRS Reallocation of Deductions of Personal Service Corporations

Under §269A, the IRS has the power to allocate deductions and other items between a personal service corporation¹¹⁹⁰ and its employee-owners, if three conditions are satisfied.¹¹⁹¹ First, substantially all of the services of the personal service corporation must be performed for or on behalf of one other corporation, partnership, or other entity.¹¹⁹² Second, the principal purpose for forming, or availing of, the personal service corporation must be the avoidance or evasion of federal income tax by reducing the income of, or securing the benefit of any expense, deduction, credit, exclusion, or other allowance for, any employee-owner which would not otherwise be available.¹¹⁹³ Third, the allocation must be necessary to prevent avoidance or evasion of federal income tax or to reflect clearly the income of the personal service corporation or any of its employee-owners.¹¹⁹⁴

c. IRS Reallocation of Reinsurance Agreement Deductions

Under §845, the IRS has the power to allocate deductions and other items related to a reinsurance agreement between or among two or more related persons if it determines the allocation is necessary to reflect the proper amount, source, or character of the taxable income or any other item of one or more of the related persons.¹¹⁹⁵ Persons are related if they are related for purposes of the §482 adjustment, as described above.¹¹⁹⁶ The §845 adjustment power can also be invoked if one of the parties to a reinsurance agreement is, with respect to any contract covered by the agreement, in effect an agent of another party to the agreement or a conduit between related persons.¹¹⁹⁷

The IRS also has the authority to reallocate deductions between unrelated parties when a reinsurance contract between them has a significant tax avoidance effect.¹¹⁹⁸ Legislative history suggests that a tax avoidance effect is significant if the transaction is designed so that the tax benefits enjoyed by one or both parties to the contract are disproportionate to the risk transferred between the parties.¹¹⁹⁹ According to the legislative history, this test focuses on the economic substance of the contract.¹²⁰⁰ The legislative history lists the following nonexclusive factors to be used in applying this test, namely, the duration or age of the business reinsured, the character of the business reinsured, the structure for determining the potential profits of each of the parties and any experience rating, the duration of the reinsurance agreement between the parties, the parties' right to terminate the reinsurance agreement and the consequences of termination, the relative tax positions of the parties, and the general financial situations of the parties.¹²⁰¹ In Trans City Life Insurance Co. v. Commissioner,¹²⁰² the Tax Court held that the IRS abused its discretion in applying this provision to reinsurance agreements between the taxpayer and another, unrelated insurance company, resting its conclusion on an analysis not only on the factors listed in the legislative history, but also two other factors, namely, the risk transferred versus the tax benefits derived and state determinations on risk transfers.¹²⁰³ The IRS has issued a nonacquiescence in this decision,¹²⁰⁴ stating that it disagrees with the court's characterization and application of these two additional factors.

2. Corporate Transactions

a. Deductions Transferable in Certain Corporate Acquisitions

Under §381, a corporation that acquires the assets of another corporation in a qualified acquisition succeeds to, and must take into account, specified deductions and other items of the transferor corporation.¹²⁰⁵ A variety of special rules and limitations apply to the transfer of the deductions to the acquiring corporation.¹²⁰⁶ The §381 deduction succession provision is discussed in detail in 780 T.M., Net Operating Losses and Other Tax Attributes — Sections 381, 382, 383, 384, and 269.

b. Limitation on Transfer of Deductions Following Ownership Change

Under §382, certain deductions that a corporation otherwise would be entitled to claim after there has been a change in its ownership are limited to a specified amount.¹²⁰⁷ The §382 limitation in effect prevents the shifting of the benefit of the deduction from one group of corporate owners to another.¹²⁰⁸ The §382 limitation is discussed in detail in 780 T.M., Net Operating Losses and Other Tax Attributes — Sections 381, 382, 383, 384, and 269.

d. Qualified Subsidiary of Tax-Exempt Real Property Entity

Deductions and other items of a qualified subsidiary of a tax-exempt real property entity are treated as belonging to that entity.¹²¹⁰ The §501(c)(25)(E)(i)(II) adjustment is discussed in 591 T.M., Real Estate Transactions by Tax-Exempt Entities (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

e. Qualified Real Estate Investment Trust Subsidiaries

Under §856, deductions and other items of a qualified real estate investment trust (REIT) subsidiary are treated as belonging to the real estate investment trust.¹²¹¹ A qualified REIT subsidiary is any corporation that is owned entirely by a real estate investment trust, but does not include taxable REIT subsidiaries.¹²¹² The §856(i)(1)(B) adjustment is discussed in 742 T.M., Real Estate Investment Trusts.

3. Trusts and Estates

a. Deduction of Grantor Trusts

Under certain circumstances specified in §672 through §679, the deductions of a trust are allowed to the person who is treated as owner of the trust, and are not allowed to the trust or its beneficiaries.¹²¹³ However, in these cases, the person who is treated as owner must also include in gross income the amounts that otherwise would have been included in the gross income of the trust.¹²¹⁴ Generally, the deductions allowed to the person treated as owner are the amounts that would be deductible had that person directly engaged in the trust's activities and transactions that are attributable to the portion of the trust of which the person is treated as owner.¹²¹⁵ A taxpayer is treated as the owner of a trust (grantor trust) if, generally, the taxpayer is the grantor and retained certain substantial powers or if the taxpayer is not the grantor but has certain equivalent substantial powers.¹²¹⁶

Example: G created T Trust, but retained substantial powers with respect to one-half of the trust income. Assume that the trust is a grantor trust on account of those powers. G is the grantor of the trust to the extent of one-half of its income and one-half of its deductions. G is allowed to deduct one-half of the amounts that would have been deductible had G directly engaged in the activities and transactions of T Trust from which it derived its income and deductions.

The taxation of owners of grantor trusts and the deduction by them of the trust's expenses, and the taxation of foreign trusts with United States beneficiaries and the deduction of those trust's expenses by persons making transfers to those trusts, are discussed in detail in 819 T.M., Grantor Trusts: Income Taxation Under Subpart E (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

b. Excess Deductions of Trusts and Estates

Under §642(h), certain deductions of a trust or estate that terminates are allowable to the beneficiaries that succeed to the property of the trust or estate.¹²¹⁷ This rule applies to the trust's or estate's unused net operating loss carryovers and unused capital loss carryovers.¹²¹⁸ It also applies to the excess of the trust's or estate's deductions for its last taxable year over its gross income for the year, without taking into account its personal exemption deduction and its charitable contribution deduction.¹²¹⁹ The §642(h) excess deductions of a trust and estate are discussed in 852 T.M., Income Taxation of Trusts and Estates (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

4. Entities and Members

a. Partnerships

(1) In General

There are four specific statutory provisions that impose the assignment of deductions doctrine in the partnership context.¹²²⁰ These provisions stand in contrast to the general principle that the sharing of profits by a partnership need not necessarily reflect the capital advanced to, or services rendered on behalf of, the partnership,¹²²¹ provided the partnership agreement is bona fide.¹²²²

(2) Substantial Economic Effect

Under §704(b), allocations of partnership deductions to a partner that do not have substantial economic effect are disregarded, and the deductions are allocated pursuant to the partner's interest in the partnership.¹²²³ Although determining whether an allocation has economic effect involves objective tests, substantiality involves comparing both the difference between after-tax consequences with and without the allocation and the difference between before-tax consequences with and without the allocation.¹²²⁴ Factors taken into account in determining the partners' interests in the partnership include the partners' relative contributions, their interests in economic profits and losses, their interests in cash flow and other nonliquidating distributions, and their rights to distributions of capital if there is a liquidation,¹²²⁵ all of which are factors analyzed in applying the judicial assignment of deductions doctrine. If a partner is itself a look-through entity, the tax consequences with and without the allocation must be examined for the owner of that partner.¹²²⁶

The validity of partnership allocations is discussed in detail in 712 T.M., Partnerships — Taxable Income; Allocation of Distributive Shares; Capital Accounts.

(3) Contributed Property

Under §704(c), income, gain, loss, and deductions attributable to property contributed to a partnership by a partner must be allocated in a manner that takes into account any difference between the fair market value of the property and its adjusted basis at the time of the contribution.¹²²⁷ Although application of §704(c) to depreciation and other issues is complex, the provision primarily prevents assignment of income and deductions.

Example: B, C, and D form a partnership in which each has a one-third interest in capital and profits. B and C contribute $100 in cash. D contributes land with a fair market value of $100 and in which D's adjusted basis is $160. Absent §704(c), the $60 of loss that would arise if the partnership sold the land for $100 would be allocated $20 to each partner. Under §704(c), the $60 loss must be allocated to D, preventing its assignment to B and C.

The §704(c) rule also applies if the partnership distributes the contributed property to a partner other than the one who contributed it.¹²²⁸ A related provision requires the partnership, under certain circumstances, to determine the character of loss or deduction by reference to the state of the property in the hands of the contributing partner immediately before its contribution, in order to prevent the contribution to the partnership from providing opportunities to alter the character of loss or deduction.¹²²⁹ Another related provision requires the contributing partner to recognize the built-in gain or loss when receiving a distribution from the partnership, to the extent that the §704(c) provision has not yet applied.¹²³⁰

The treatment of property contributed to a partnership is discussed in detail in 712 T.M., Partnerships — Taxable Income; Allocation of Distributive Shares; Capital Accounts.

(4) Partnership Interests Created by Gift

Under §704(e), special rules apply to partnership interests created by gift to prevent partnerships from taking advantage of circumstances which generally would provide, in the absence of the rules, opportunities to avoid the assignment of deductions doctrine.¹²³¹ These rules are discussed in detail in 722

T.M., Family Limited Partnerships and Limited Liability Companies.

(5) The Varying Interest Rule

Under §706(d), if the interests of the partners vary during the taxable year, allocations of deductions and other items of the partnership must take the varying interests into account.¹²³² In addition, certain items of a cash method partnership, such as interest, taxes, compensation, and rent, must be assigned proportionately to each day to which it is attributable, and the portion assigned to each day can be allocated only to those who are partners on that day.¹²³³

Note: In effect, this rule prohibits “retroactive” allocation of deductions and other items to persons who are not partners during the period in which the deductions arose; as such, it reflects the judicial assignment of deductions doctrine.

Example: A, B, and C are one-third partners in ABC Partnership. During the current taxable year the partnership generates $730,000 in rental expenses. On November 1, the partners admit D to the partnership; thereafter each is a one-fourth partner. Of the $730,000, $2,000 is assigned to each day in the year. For the first 304 days, $608,000 is assigned, and none is permitted to be allocated to D. In effect, A, B, and C are prevented from allocating any of the $608,000 in deductions to D.

The §706(d) varying interest rule is discussed in detail in 712 T.M., Partnerships — Taxable Income; Allocation of Distributive Shares; Capital Accounts.

b. S Corporations

Under §1366(e), if an individual who is a member of the family of one or more of the shareholders in an S corporation renders services for, or furnishes capital to, the corporation without receiving adequate compensation, the IRS must make adjustments to the deductions and other items taken into account by the individual and the shareholders in order to reflect the value of those services or capital.¹²³⁴ Family includes only spouses, ancestors, lineal descendants, and trusts created for the primary benefit of such persons.¹²³⁵

The application of this statutory codification of the assignment of deductions doctrine in the S corporation context is discussed in detail in 732 T.M., S Corporations: Shareholder Tax Issues.

¹²³¹ Section 704(e) was reorganized by the Bipartisan Budget Act of 2015 (2015 BBA), Pub. L. No. 114-74, §1102, effective January 1, 2016, by moving the definition in §704(e)(1) to the general definition of “partner” in §761(b), redesignating §704(e)(2) and §704(e)(3) as §704(e)(1) and §704(e)(2), respectively, and retitling §704(e) “Partnership Interests Created By Gift.”

5. Provisions Relating to Deduction of Taxes

a. Apportionment of Real Property Taxes

Under §164(d), a special real property tax apportionment rule applies and is used to determine the amount of the taxes imposed on a purchaser and seller of real estate, regardless of how they decide to allocate the real estate taxes for the year of sale or for prior or subsequent years.¹²³⁶ No taxpayer is permitted to deduct the taxes that are treated under the apportionment rule as being imposed on the other taxpayer.¹²³⁷ If one party pays the taxes treated as imposed on the other, they are treated as additional cost if paid by the purchaser and as a reduction of amount realized if paid by the seller.¹²³⁸

Note: Beginning in 2018, itemized deductions for the aggregate of state and local real estate taxes not paid or accrued in carrying on a trade or business or investment activity described in §212, and state and local income, war profits, and excess profits taxes (or sales taxes in lieu of these taxes) paid or accrued in the tax year, are limited to:

- tax years 2018 through 2024, $10,000 ($5,000 married filing separate);
- tax years 2025, $40,000 ($20,000 married filing separate);
- tax years 2026, $40,400 ($20,200 married filing separate);

- tax years 2027 through 2029, 101% of the preceding calendar year limit (half for married filing separate);
- tax years after 2029, $10,000 ($5,000 married filing separate).¹²³⁹

The §164(d) real property tax apportionment rule is discussed in detail in 525 T.M., State, Local, and Federal Taxes.

b. Taxes of Shareholder Paid by Corporation

Under §164(e), if a corporation pays a tax imposed on a shareholder on the shareholder's interest as a shareholder and is not reimbursed by the shareholder, the corporation is allowed to deduct the tax and the shareholder is not allowed to deduct the tax.¹²⁴⁰ The amount paid on behalf of the shareholder is not included in the shareholder's gross income.¹²⁴¹

The §164(e) provision is discussed in detail in 525 T.M., State, Local, and Federal Taxes.

c. Cooperative Housing Corporation Shareholders

Under §216(a)(1), tenant-stockholders of cooperative housing corporations are permitted to deduct their proportionate share of real property taxes paid by the corporation.¹²⁴² The §216(a)(1) provision is discussed in detail in 596 T.M., Residential Cooperative and Condominiums.

IV. Deduction Limitations and Allowances

A. Introduction

1. In General

One of the more confusing aspects of deductions, at least to those exploring federal income tax law for the first time, is that Congress not only has selected only certain transactions as justifying the allowance of deductions, but also has imposed limitations or restrictions on the allowance of some deductions.¹²⁴³ Deduction limitations are not unconstitutional, because the Constitution does not guarantee to all taxpayers the same economically equivalent deductions under all circumstances.¹²⁴⁴ Different types of limitations and restrictions, discussed below, are used for different policy goals. The limitations and restrictions reflect several general approaches. In some instances, the restriction provides, in effect, that although a transaction meets the tests for a particular deduction, the deduction nonetheless is not allowable.¹²⁴⁵ In other instances, the restriction provides additional tests for the deduction.¹²⁴⁶ In still other instances, the restriction limits the amount of an otherwise available deduction.¹²⁴⁷ Thus, an amount that is otherwise deductible under a deduction provision nonetheless may not be deductible in full if a deduction restriction or limitation applies. Generally, restrictions and limitations that apply to a specific deduction are described in connection with the explanation of that deduction, but restrictions and limitations that apply to groups of deductions are discussed in IV.B., below through IV.G., below. Trade or business deductions are discussed in 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions.

2. Types of Limitations and Restrictions

a. Computational Limitations

Certain limitations are computational in nature. Some deduction limitations further a policy of directing the benefits of a deduction to taxpayers with lower income. Other limitations further a policy of allowing deductions only for extraordinary expenses. For example, otherwise deductible medical expenses¹²⁴⁸ and casualty losses¹²⁴⁹ are allowed only for expenses exceeding a specified percentage of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income. Certain limitations further a policy of not permitting the excess of deductions over gross income from an activity, or group of activities, to offset gross income from other sources.

No. 119-21, §70109 (limiting personal casualty and theft loss deductions to losses incurred in federally declared disasters in tax years beginning after 2017 and before 2026, and to losses incurred in federally declared disasters or state declared disasters in tax years beginning after 2025). However, a taxpayer can still use a personal casualty loss to offset a personal casualty gain. §165(h)(5)(B), amended by the OBBBA, §70109.

For example, passive losses generally are deductible only to the extent of passive income,¹²⁵⁰ capital losses are deductible only to the extent of capital gains, plus, for individuals, an additional amount,¹²⁵¹ and losses from the rental of personal dwellings cannot, in effect, offset other income.¹²⁵²

b. Double Benefit Restrictions

Certain restrictions apply when the taxpayer has the advantage of some other tax benefit. For example, if a taxpayer receives assistance in meeting an otherwise deductible expenditure and the assistance is excludible from gross income, the taxpayer may not deduct the expenditure.¹²⁵³ The benefit can be the exclusion of an amount from gross income,¹²⁵⁴ the allowance of a credit,¹²⁵⁵ or advantageous characterization of expenses.¹²⁵⁶

Generally, taxpayers are prohibited from claiming multiple deductions for the same economic loss. Under the principle sometimes referred to as the Ilfeld doctrine, a double deduction is permissible only if the taxpayer can assert a statutory or regulatory provision that may fairly be read to authorize the double deduction.¹²⁵⁷ The Tax Court has stated that this requires a specific statutory provision, not just a general allowance provision.¹²⁵⁸ If a statute is silent, a double deduction is not authorized. Similarly, taxpayers generally are prohibited from claiming deductions for amounts that are the basis for the claiming of a credit.¹²⁵⁹ Double benefit restrictions are described in IV.C., below.

c. Public Policy Restrictions

Some amounts otherwise deductible are disallowed to support nontax public policy. Thus, deductions are not allowed for illegal bribes,¹²⁶⁰ fines and similar penalties,¹²⁶¹ certain lobbying expenses,¹²⁶² settlements subject to nondisclosure agreements paid in connection with sexual harassment or sexual abuse,¹²⁶³ and the expenses of illegal drug sales.¹²⁶⁴ Other restrictions reflect a variety of public policy concerns. Public policy restrictions are described in IV.D., below.

d. Timing Matter Restrictions

Some deduction restrictions reflect a policy of matching a deduction to the tax year to which it most appropriately belongs. Thus, for example, otherwise deductible expenditures for assets reasonably expected to generate economic benefits for more than one year may not be deducted in the year paid, but must be capitalized and deducted over an appropriate time period through depreciation, cost recovery, or amortization deductions or used as a basis adjustment to reduce the gain or increase the loss on the disposition of the asset.¹²⁶⁵ Certain restrictions on deductions reflect the nature of the expenditure as amounts that are properly chargeable to a capital account. These include capital expenditures,¹²⁶⁶ capitalized inventory costs,¹²⁶⁷ and demolition expenses.¹²⁶⁸ Capitalization restrictions are described in II.F.2.c., above, and 509 T.M., Principles of Capitalization.

e. Compliance Failure Restrictions

There are restrictions on deductions for failure to continue to comply with conditions for tax benefits.¹²⁶⁹ These restrictions are described in IV.E., below.

f. Personal Expenditure Limitations and Restrictions

Some limitations and restrictions on deductions reflect the basic concept that personal expenditures are generally not deductible.¹²⁷⁰ For example, the expense for painting a room in an individual's personal residence is not deductible. These limitations and restrictions are described in IV.F., below.

g. Miscellaneous Limitations and Restrictions

There are approximately a dozen miscellaneous limitations and restrictions.¹²⁷¹ These restrictions and limitations are described in IV.G., below.

¹²⁶⁰ See §162(c).

¹²⁶¹ See §162(f), which generally denies a deduction for fines, penalties, and other amounts paid to or at the direction of a government or government entity in relation to the violation of any law or the investigation by a government or governmental entity into the potential violation of any law. Note that there are exceptions for payments that are characterized as restitution (including remediation of property) or legal compliance costs. §162(f)(2).

B. Computational Limitations

1. Limitation Based on a Percentage of Income

a. Overall Limitation on Itemized Deductions

Under §68, taxpayers must reduce the amount of otherwise allowable itemized deductions by 2/37 of the lesser of two amounts: (1) such amount of itemized deductions or (2) the taxable income of the taxpayer for the tax year (determined without regard to §68 and increased by such amount of itemized deductions) that exceeds the dollar amount under §1 at which the 37% rate bracket begins for the taxpayer.¹²⁷²

b. Dividends Received Deduction Limitation

Under §246(b), the aggregate amount of limited dividends received deductions that may be available to corporations is limited to the dividends received limitation amount, which is based on a percentage of the corporate shareholder's taxable income.¹²⁷³ The dividends received deduction limitation is discussed in detail in 764 T.M., Current Distributions — Cash and Property.

2. Limitations Equal to Income or Similar Amount

a. Hobby Loss Limitation

Under §183, deductions attributable to activities not engaged in for profit by individuals, trusts, estates, or S corporations¹²⁷⁴ are generally limited to the gross income from the activity.¹²⁷⁵ This limitation is commonly referred to as the "hobby loss limitation." However, a taxpayer can deduct expenses in excess of gross income if the expenses are allowable without regard to a taxpayer's profit motive, such as home mortgages, casualty and theft losses, and taxes.¹²⁷⁶

In determining if an activity is subject to the hobby loss limitation, a facts-and-circumstances test applies, with the main focus being on "an honest profit objective."¹²⁷⁷ An activity is presumed to be engaged in for profit if the activity produces income in excess of deductions in three or more tax years during a period of five consecutive tax years that ends with the tax year.¹²⁷⁸ Activities that are scrutinized as possible hobbies

¹²⁷² §68(a), amended by the One Big Beautiful Bill Act (OBBBA), Pub. L. No. 119-21, §70111, effective for tax years beginning after Dec. 31, 2025.

¹²⁷³ See §246(b)(1); Reg. §1.246-2(a).

¹²⁷⁵ §183(b); Reg. §1.183-1(b).

¹²⁷⁸ §183(d). See also §183(e) (allowing a taxpayer to elect to defer the application of the §183(d) presumption until the close of the fifth tax year of the activity). A different presumption applies in the case of the breeding, training, showing, or racing of horses. For the specified horse activity, the presumption of profit motive is met if the activity produces income in excess of deductions in two or more tax years during a period of seven consecutive tax years that ends within the tax year.

include fishing, horse racing, horse breeding, farming, motor-cross racing, auto racing, craft sales, bowling, stamp collecting, dog breeding, yacht charter, artists, gambling, direct sales, photography, writing, entertainers, airplane charter, and rentals.¹²⁷⁹

Note: Section 183 has effectively been rendered superfluous because miscellaneous itemized deductions are disallowed for tax years after 2017.¹²⁸⁰ However, a taxpayer can still deduct expenses in excess of gross income if the expenses are allowable without regard to a taxpayer's profit motive and are not miscellaneous itemized deductions, such as home mortgages¹²⁸¹ and taxes.¹²⁸²

Example (1): In 2017, an individual taxpayer is an artist who occasionally sells her paintings. The taxpayer's gross income from her paintings has never exceeded her expenses. In the current year, the taxpayer has $100 of income from the sale of her paintings. She also has the following expenses: $100 supplies and $150 in home mortgage and real estate taxes allocable to her home studio. Assuming the taxpayer's painting activity is held to be not engaged in for profit, the taxpayer is subject to the hobby loss limitation and can deduct only $150. If the expenses were incurred in 2018, the taxpayer still would be subject to the hobby loss limitation and could still deduct only $150.

Example (2): In 2017, an individual taxpayer is an artist that occasionally sells her paintings. The taxpayer's gross income from her paintings has never exceeded her expenses. In the current year, the taxpayer has $100 of income from the sale of her paintings. She also has the following expenses: $100 supplies and $75 in home mortgage and real estate taxes allocable to her home studio. Assuming the taxpayer's painting activity is held to be not engaged in for profit, the taxpayer is subject to the hobby loss limitation and can deduct only $100 ($75 for the home mortgage and taxes and $25 for the supplies). If the expenses were incurred in 2018, the taxpayer still would be subject to the hobby loss limitation but could deduct only the $75 home mortgage and taxes. The deduction for the supplies would be disallowed, because it would be considered a miscellaneous itemized deduction.

The §183 hobby loss limitation is discussed in detail in 548 T.M., Hobby Losses.

b. Passive Loss Limitation

To prevent taxpayers from using losses generated from activities in which the taxpayer did not materially participate, §469 suspends the use of such losses from sheltering other sources of active income, such as compensation.¹²⁸³ This limitation is commonly referred to as the "passive loss limitation." Under §469, an individual, estate, trust, closely held C corporation,¹²⁸⁴ or any personal-service corporation¹²⁸⁵ may not deduct losses¹²⁸⁶ from passive activities that exceed the income from such passive activities.¹²⁸⁷ Thus, a taxpayer may not use losses from passive activities to offset income from non-passive activities, such as salaries. A taxpayer may carry forward any disallowed passive-activity losses and use her excess losses in subsequent years to offset passive income.¹²⁸⁸ A taxpayer may also carry forward disallowed passive-activity losses when there is a disposition of the passive activity that generated the passive loss. For example, if a taxpayer participates in a passive activity and has a loss of $100, the taxpayer cannot use the $100 loss to offset the taxpayer's salary. Instead, the taxpayer would carry forward the $100 loss for use in subsequent years.¹²⁸⁹ Therefore, the passive loss limitation does not permanently disallow the use of excess passive-activity losses; rather, it defers such use.

An activity qualifies as "passive" if it involves a trade or business in which "the taxpayer does not materially participate."¹²⁹⁰ A taxpayer "materially participates" only by regularly, ¹²⁸² §183(b)(1). For tax years after 2017, the deduction of real estate taxes for a personal residence for the aggregate of state and local real estate taxes not paid or accrued in carrying on a trade or business or investment activity described in §212, and state and local income, war profits, and excess profits taxes (or sales taxes in lieu of these taxes) paid or accrued in the tax year, is limited as follows: tax years 2018 through 2024, $10,000 ($5,000 married filing separate); tax year 2025, $40,000 ($20,000 married filing separate); tax year 2026, $40,400 ($20,200 married filing separate); tax years 2027 through 2029, 101% of the preceding calendar year limit (half for married filing separate); and tax years after 2029, $10,000 ($5,000 married filing separate). §164(b)(6), amended by the OBBBA, §70120, §164(b)(7), added by the OBBBA, §70120.

The passive-loss rules of §469 apply on a limited basis to closely held C corporations.

¹²⁸⁵ §469(j)(2), §269A(b)(1)-(2) (defining a "personal service corporation" as a corporation in which at least 10% of the stock, by value, is held by employee-owners and whose principal activity is providing personal services that its employees substantially perform). Special rules exist regarding the application of the passive-loss rules of §469 to personal service corporations.

¹²⁸⁶ §469(a)(1)(B). A similar limitation exists for passive-activity tax credits. While a taxpayer may carry over disallowed passive credits to offset future passive income, the disposition of a passive activity does not trigger the use of such credits.

But see §469(c)(2), §469(c)(7), §469(i) (providing that a rental activity is a "passive activity," but providing certain exceptions for taxpayers involved in real estate).

continuously, and substantially participating in the activity.¹²⁹¹ Treasury Regulation §1.469-5T sets out seven separate tests for proving material participation. To prevent a taxpayer from using passive losses to shelter income from the typical forms of investment, such as dividends, interests, and capital gains from the sale of securities, Congress prohibited the consideration of net portfolio income when calculating income or loss arising from a passive activity.¹²⁹²

The passive loss limitation is discussed in detail in 549 T.M., Passive Loss Rules.

c. Capital Loss Limitations

Under §1211(a), a corporation's capital losses that are otherwise deductible are allowed only to the extent of capital gains.¹²⁹³ Under §1211(b), capital losses of taxpayers other than corporations that are otherwise deductible are allowed only to the extent of capital gains plus the lesser of $3,000 or the excess of capital losses over capital gains.¹²⁹⁴ For married individuals filing separate returns, the $3,000 limitation is reduced to $1,500.¹²⁹⁵ For individuals, capital loss deductions that are unused in a tax year due to the limitation are carried over to the next tax year and retains their character as short-term or long-term.¹²⁹⁶ For a corporation, special rules apply to any capital loss that is unused in a tax year due to the limitation allowing the capital loss to be carried back and carried forward subject to limitations.¹²⁹⁷

Example: An individual taxpayer has long-term capital loss of $10,000 and long-term capital gain of $6,000. The capital loss reduces the taxpayer's capital gain to $0. The taxpayer can claim $3,000 of the remaining $4,000 capital loss as a deduction against her ordinary income. The remaining $1,000 capital loss will carryforward to the next tax year.

The capital loss limitations are discussed in detail in 562 T.M., Capital Assets — Related Issues.

d. Other Limitations

Examples of other limitations equal to an income or similar amount include:

- The §199A qualified business income deduction limitation discussed in detail in 537 T.M., Qualified Business Income Deduction: Section 199A,¹²⁹⁸

- The §163(j) limitation on the deduction of business interest discussed in detail in 536 T.M., Interest Expense Deductions,¹²⁹⁹

- The §470 tax-exempt use loss limitation discussed in 593 T.M., Real Estate Leases.

3. Limitations Equal to Specified Amount

a. At-Risk Limitation

Generally, under §465, any loss of an individual¹³⁰¹ or a closely held C corporation¹³⁰² arising from a business or investment-related activity is limited to the taxpayer's aggregate amount at risk for the activity as of the end of the tax year.¹³⁰³ This limitation is commonly referred to as the "at-risk limitation." A taxpayer may carry forward any amount disallowed under the at-risk limitation and use her excess losses in subsequent years to offset at-risk amounts.¹³⁰⁴ A loss is the excess of deductions for the tax year allocable to an activity¹³⁰⁵ that are otherwise allowable over the income received or accrued by the taxpayer¹³⁰⁶ during the tax year from the activity.¹³⁰⁷ A taxpayer's amount at risk includes the amount of money and adjusted basis of other property that the taxpayer contributes to the activity.¹³⁰⁸ Certain amounts borrowed with respect to such activity are included in the at-risk amount¹³⁰⁹ to the extent the taxpayer is personally liable for the repayment of the amount borrowed or the taxpayer has pledged property, other than the

No. 99-313, at 728 (1985) ("To permit portfolio income to be offset by passive losses ... would create the inequitable result of restricting sheltering by individuals dependent for support on wages or active business income, while permitting sheltering by those whose income is derived from an investment portfolio."); see also Reg. §1.469-2T(c)(3) ("Passive activity gross income does not include portfolio income.").

See also §542(a)(2) (defining a closely held C corporation as a corporation that is more than 50% owned, directly or indirectly, by five or fewer persons at any time during the last half of the tax year). However, the at-risk rules do not apply to a "qualified C corporation." §465(c)(7). See also Prop. Reg. §1.465-10 (applying the at-risk limitation to S Corporations and their shareholders on a limited basis).

property used in the activity, as security for the debt.¹³¹⁰ However, a taxpayer is not considered at risk for amounts protected against loss through nonrecourse financing, guarantees, stop loss agreements, or other similar arrangements.¹³¹¹ Notwithstanding, a taxpayer will be considered at risk for “qualified nonrecourse financing” in the activity of holding real property.¹³¹²

Example: An individual taxpayer materially participates in an activity for profit. The taxpayer donated $100 cash and other property with an adjusted basis of $200 to the activity. Thus, the taxpayer is at risk for $300. The taxpayer has $500 of loss in the current year from the activity. Under the at-risk rules only $300 is currently deductible. The remaining $200 is carried forward to the following year.

The at-risk limitation is discussed in detail in 550 T.M., At-Risk Rules.

b. Repurchased Bond Premium Deduction Limitation

A corporation’s deductions for any repurchase premium paid or incurred on the repurchase of a convertible obligation are limited to the adjusted issue price plus a normal call premium on nonconvertible obligations.¹³¹³

Example: A corporation issues a callable 20-year convertible bond at face for $2,000 bearing interest at 10% per annum. The bond is convertible at any time into two shares of the common stock of the corporation. Under the terms of the bond, the applicable call price is $2,200. The corporation calls the bond for $2,200. Since the repurchase premium, $200 ($2,200 – $2,000), was specified in dollars in the obligation and does not exceed one year’s interest at the rate fixed in the obligation, the $200 is considered to be a normal call premium on a comparable nonconvertible obligation. Accordingly, the corporation may deduct the $200.¹³¹⁴

The repurchased bond premium deduction limitation is discussed in 181 T.M., Time Value of Money — Holders of Debt Instruments, 182 T.M., Time Value of Money — Issuers of Debt Instruments, and 188 T.M., Taxation of Equity Derivatives.

c. Reciprocal Insurance Company Attorney-in-Fact Deduction Limitation

(1) In General

Under §835, a reciprocal insurance company can elect to subject its attorney-in-fact deductions to the attorney-in-fact deduction limitation.¹³¹⁵ The §835 attorney-in-fact deduction limitation is described in IV.B.3.c.(3), below.

(2) Reciprocal Insurance Company

A reciprocal insurance company is any mutual insurance company that is an interinsurer or reciprocal underwriter subject to taxation as an insurance company other than a life insurance company.¹³¹⁶

(3) Attorney-in-Fact Deduction Limitation

If a taxpayer elects for the attorney-in-fact deduction limitation to apply, the deductions otherwise allowable for amounts paid or incurred during the tax year to the attorney-in-fact by the reciprocal is limited to, but not increased by, the deductions of the attorney-in-fact allocable, to the extent specified by the IRS in regulations, to the income received by the attorney-in-fact from the reciprocal.¹³¹⁷ Any increase in the reciprocal’s taxable income attributable to the limitation is taxed at the highest rate of tax applicable to corporations.¹³¹⁸

The reciprocal is credited with so much of the tax paid by the attorney-in-fact as is attributable to the income received by the attorney-in-fact from the reciprocal in that tax year, to the extent specified by the IRS in regulations.¹³¹⁹ The reciprocal’s taxes must be adjusted for any credit or refund for taxes allowed to the attorney-in-fact with respect to taxes credited to the reciprocal.¹³²⁰ The §835 attorney-in-fact deduction limitation has no effect on the tax liability of the attorney-in-fact.¹³²¹

(4) Election

The election is effective for the tax year for which made and for all succeeding tax years.¹³²² The election can be revoked only with the consent of the IRS.¹³²³

(5) Exception

The election may not be made unless the attorney-in-fact of the reciprocal satisfies four conditions.¹³²⁴ First, the attorney-in-fact must be subject to the federal corporate income tax.¹³²⁵ Second, the attorney-in-fact must consent in the manner specified by the IRS in regulations to make available whatever information is required, as specified by the IRS in regulations, during the period for which the election is in effect.¹³²⁶ Third, the attorney-in-fact must report the income received from the reciprocal and the deductions allocable to that income under the same method of accounting under which the reciprocal reports deductions for amounts paid to the attorney-in-fact.¹³²⁷ Fourth, the attorney-in-fact must file its return on the calendar year basis.¹³²⁸

Examples of other limitations equal to a specified amount include:

- The §280F automobile and listed property deduction limitations discussed in detail in 519 T.M., Travel, Transportation, Entertainment, Meal, and Gift Expenses;
- The §280G parachute payment limitation discussed in detail in 396 T.M., Golden Parachutes;

- The S corporation shareholder's §1366(d) adjusted basis loss limitation discussed in detail in 731 T.M., S Corporations: Operations.

4. Limitations Based on Specified Reductions

a. Reduction of Financial Institution Preference Item Deductions

(1) In General

Under §291(a)(3), an amount otherwise allowable as a deduction with respect to a financial institution preference item is reduced by 20%.¹³²⁹ For a detailed discussion of §291 financial institution items, see 536 T.M., Interest Expense.

(2) Financial Institution Preference Items

(a) In General

Financial institution preference items consist of interest paid or incurred by a bank¹³³⁰ on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry specified obligations, to the extent the interest would be deductible were it not for the fact that the §265 limitation, described in 536 T.M., Interest Expense, applies.¹³³¹ Specified obligations are obligations acquired after December 31, 1982, and before August 8, 1986, the interest on which is exempt from federal income taxes.¹³³² Specified obligations also include those acquired after August 7, 1986, if it is a qualified tax-exempt obligation for purposes of the §265(b) limitation, described in 536 T.M., Interest Expense.¹³³³ A limited de minimis safe harbor rule applies to the allocation rules of §265(b)(2). This rule provides that in calculating the taxpayer's average adjusted bases in tax-exempt obligations under §265(b)(2)(A), tax-exempt obligations issued during 2009 or 2010 are not considered, but only up to the amount that is equal to 2% of the taxpayer's average adjusted bases for all assets under §265(b)(2)(B).¹³³⁴ For purposes of this rule, a current refunding bond or advance refunding bond is treated as issued on the date of the refunded bond. If there are a series of refunding bonds, the date of the original bond controls.¹³³⁵

(b) Interest Paid or Incurred on Indebtedness

The amount of interest paid or incurred on the indebtedness is determined by multiplying the aggregate amount allowable as interest deductions for the tax year determined without regard to the §291(a)(3) reduction or the §265(b) limitation, by a fraction.¹³³⁶ The numerator of the fraction is the taxpayer's average adjusted basis¹³³⁷ of the specified obligations.¹³³⁸ The denominator of the fraction is the average adjusted basis of all of the taxpayer's assets.¹³³⁹ The taxpayer may establish a different formula to the extent specified by the IRS in regulations.¹³⁴⁰

(c) Interest

Interest includes amounts, whether designated interest, paid in respect of deposits, investments certificates, and withdrawable or purchasable shares.¹³⁴¹

b. Other Limitations

Examples of other limitations based on specified reductions include:

- The §291(a)(2) percentage depletion reduction discussed in detail in 601 T.M., Mineral Properties — Exploration, Acquisition, Development and Disposition, and 605 T.M., Oil and Gas Transactions;
- The §291(a)(4) percentage pollution control facility amortization deduction reduction, which the amortizable basis of any certified pollution control facility with respect to which the election under §169 is made to deduct amortization of that basis is reduced by 20%, discussed in detail in 530 T.M., Depreciation: General Concepts; Non-ACRS Rules; and
- The §291(b) reduction of mineral limitation, which provides that certain mineral deductions otherwise allowable are reduced by 30%, discussed in detail in 605 T.M., Oil and Gas Transactions.

5. Compensation-Related Limitations

Examples of computational limitations applying compensation-related limitations include:

- the §406(d) specified foreign affiliate employees §404 deduction limitation discussed in detail 371 T.M., Employee Plans — Deductions, Contributions and Funding;

C. Double Benefit Restrictions

1. Deductions Attributable to Excluded Income

a. Congressional Allowances

No deduction is allowed for expenses paid or incurred by designated congressional officials with respect to which they receive reimbursement that is excluded from gross income.¹³⁴² Designated congressional officials consist of the Majority and Minority Leaders of the Senate,¹³⁴³ the President Pro Tempore of the Senate,¹³⁴⁴ the Chairs of the Majority and Minority Conference Committees,¹³⁴⁵ the Secretary for the Majority of the Senate and the Secretary for the Minority of the Senate,¹³⁴⁶ and the Secretary, Sergeant at Arms, and Doorkeeper of the Senate.¹³⁴⁷

b. Expenses Attributable to Conrail Reorganization

No deduction is allowed to Conrail¹³⁴⁸ for any amount paid after the date of the public sale of its stock¹³⁴⁹ for services paid on or before the date of the public sale.¹³⁵⁰ This disallowance reflects certain tax benefits accorded Conrail as a consequence of the public sale.¹³⁵¹

c. Expenses Attributable to Federal Financial Assistance

Under §597(b)(3), no deduction is allowed for any expenditure for which, in effect, the taxpayer is reimbursed through nontaxable federal financial assistance.¹³⁵² Federal financial assistance is money or other property provided with respect to a domestic building and loan association by the Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation or the Resolution Trust Corporation under §406(f) of the National Housing Act, §21A of the Federal Home Loan Bank Act, or under any other similar law.¹³⁵³ It also includes any money or other property provided with respect to a bank or domestic building and loan association by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation under §11(f) or §13(c) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act, or any other similar law.¹³⁵⁴ Certain federal financial assistance is nontaxable.¹³⁵⁵ The IRS stated that until further guidance is issued, amounts furnished by the Department of the Treasury to financial institutions pursuant to the Troubled Assets Relief Program (TARP) established under the Emergency Economic Stabilization Act of 2008¹³⁵⁶ will not be treated as the provision of federal financial assistance within the meaning of §597. The IRS also stated that if any future guidance provides to the contrary, that guidance will not apply retroactively to transactions with the Department of the Treasury, or to securities issued by financial institutions to the Department of the Treasury, before the publication of such guidance, or pursuant to a written binding contract entered into before that date.¹³⁵⁷

d. Other Deductions Disallowed

Examples of other deductions attributable to excluded income include:

- The §127(c)(7) educational assistance exclusion, providing no deduction is allowed for amounts excluded from gross income under the §127 educational assistance exclusion,¹³⁵⁸ discussed in detail in 517 T.M., Educational Expenses and Credits;
- The §129(e)(7) dependent care assistance exclusion, providing no deduction is allowed for amounts excluded from gross income under the §129 dependent care assistance exclusion, discussed in detail in 394 T.M., Employee Fringe Benefits;
- The §421(a)(2) stock option exclusion, providing no deduction is allowed with respect to a transfer of stock that qualifies for the §421(a)(1) exclusion due to qualifying as a §422 incentive stock option or as a §423 employee stock purchase plan option,¹³⁵⁹ discussed in detail in 381 T.M., Statutory Stock Options;

ance income subject to taxation under Subpart F, discussed in 926 T.M., CFCs — General Overview (Foreign Income Series);

- The §901(g)(1) possession corporation disallowance, providing no deduction is allowed for any tax of a foreign country or possession paid or accrued with respect to a possessions corporation distribution, discussed in 6020 T.M., The Creditability of Foreign Taxes — General Issues (Foreign Income Series);
- The §118(c)(4)¹³⁶² exclusion for contributions in aid of construction, providing no deduction is allowed for, or by reason of, any expenditure constituting a contribution in aid of construction that is excluded by a regulated water or sewage disposal utility, discussed in 501 T.M., Gross Income: Overview and Conceptual Aspects; and
- The §136(b) energy conservation subsidy exclusion, providing a public utility customer who excludes from gross income an energy conservation subsidy provided by a public utility is not allowed to deduct any expenditure with respect to which the subsidy was granted, to the extent of the amount excluded, discussed in 512 T.M., Tax Incentives for Production and Conservation of Energy and Natural Resources.

With respect to an alimony deduction, there is no double benefit if the amount deducted by one spouse is included in income by the other spouse.¹³⁶³ In Leyh, the Tax Court held that the taxpayer may deduct as alimony the amount of the premiums he paid to provide health insurance coverage for his then-wife under his employer's cafeteria plan, even though the value of the employer-provided health insurance was excludible from his income. The court reasoned that there was no double benefit because the amounts deducted by the taxpayer were included in his then-wife's income.¹³⁶⁴

2. Deductions Attributable to Amounts for Which Credit Allowed

A taxpayer allowed a credit for an expenditure cannot claim a deduction for the same expenditure. Examples of this principle are as follows:

- Section 30B(h)(5)(A), §30B(h)(5)(B), disallowance of certain deductions for which a motor vehicle credit was claimed. For further discussion, see 512 T.M., Tax Incentives for Production and Conservation of Energy and Natural Resources;
- Section §43(d)(1), providing any deduction allowable with respect to costs taken into account in computing the enhanced oil recovery credit¹³⁶⁵ is reduced by the amount of the credit attributable to those costs. For further discussion, see 605 T.M., Oil and Gas Transactions;

Commissioner*, 78 T.C. 989 (1982) (Tax Court based its disallowance of expense deduction on §265, finding close connection between receipt of tax-exempt income and the claimed deduction for education expense claimed by taxpayer; court reasoned that right to reimbursement for expense arose only when the Veterans Administration received signed certification of training and cost of such training). Cf. Leyh v. Commissioner, 157 T.C. No. 7 (2021) (§265 does not apply to husband's alimony deduction; husband's alimony payments are not allocable to tax-exempt income because husband's spouse (recipient of the payments deducted) was required to include the payments in her income); CCA 200947035 (§265 does not prohibit an employer's deduction of compensation payments made to its disabled employee because deduction is not allocable to the insurance proceeds received from the disability policy; employer received the disability insurance payment on account of its employee's disability, not on account of its contractual obligation to pay the employee's salary; with no connection between the income and the expense, the requirement that the expense be allocable to the tax-exempt income is not met, and §265 does not disallow the deduction).

In addition, where an eligible taxpayer elects to transfer all or a portion of an eligible credit to an unrelated taxpayer under the §6418 credit transfer election,¹³⁸⁹ with respect to any amount paid by the transferee taxpayer as consideration for such transfer, that amount is not deductible.¹³⁹⁰

Examples of deduction attributed to favorable characterized amounts include:

- The §268 unharvested crop production expenses deduction disallowances¹³⁹¹ discussed in detail in 607 T.M., Farm and Ranch Expenses and Credit; and
- The §272 coal and domestic iron ore disposition contract expenses disallowance¹³⁹² discussed in detail in 603 T.M., Mineral Properties Other Than Gas and Oil — Operation.

4. Other Double Benefit Restrictions

a. Interrelationship with Previous Internal Revenue Codes

Under §7852(c), unless otherwise distinctly expressed or manifestly intended, the same item must not be taken into account both in computing an income tax under the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 and an income tax under the Internal Revenue Code of 1939.¹³⁹³

b. Trusts and Estates

(1) Interrelationship with Estate Tax Deductions

Under §642(g), amounts allowable as estate tax deductions for expenses, debts, taxes, and losses¹³⁹⁴ are not allowed as income tax deductions, or offsets against amount realized, in computing the taxable income of the estate or any other person unless there is filed a statement¹³⁹⁵ that the amounts have not been allowed as estate tax deductions and that the right to claim the amounts as estate tax deductions is waived.¹³⁹⁶ Similar principles apply to amounts that are allowable as generation skipping tax deductions under §2621(a)(2) and §2622(b).¹³⁹⁷ The §642(g) disallowance is discussed in detail in 852 T.M., In- come Taxation of Trusts and Estates (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

(2) Distributions Deductions

Under §663(a)(3), an estate or complex trust is not allowed to deduct an amount paid, credited, or distributed in the tax year if that amount was taken into account for a preceding tax year as a credit or required distribution.¹³⁹⁸ The §663(a)(3) disallowance is discussed in 852 T.M., Income Taxation of Trusts and Estates (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

c. Insurance Companies

Under §832(d), no item may be deducted more than once by an insurance company.¹³⁹⁹

D. Public Policy Restrictions

1. Introduction

Some amounts otherwise deductible are disallowed to support nontax public policy. Thus, deductions are not allowed for illegal bribes,¹⁴⁰⁰ fines and similar penalties,¹⁴⁰¹ certain lobbying expenses,¹⁴⁰² settlements subject to nondisclosure agreements paid in connection with sexual harassment or sexual abuse,¹⁴⁰³ and the expenses of illegal drug sales.¹⁴⁰⁴ Additionally, the IRS has the broad authority, under §269, to disallow any deduction arising from a tainted acquisition if the principal purpose of the acquisition was to secure the benefit of the deduction.¹⁴⁰⁵ The §269 disallowance is discussed in detail in 780 T.M., Net Operating Losses and Other Tax Attributes — Sections 381, 382, 383, 384, and 269. Loss between related parties is also disallowed. Under §267(a)(1), no deduction otherwise allowable is allowed with respect to any loss from the sale or exchange of property, directly or indirectly, between related persons.¹⁴⁰⁶ Note that proposed rules issued in November 2023 would revise the regulations under §267 and §707 to reflect Congress's intent underlying these provisions that partnerships should be viewed as an entity rather than as an aggregate of its partners when applying the loss disallowance rules of §267(a)(1) and §707(b)(1).¹⁴⁰⁷

If the §267(a)(1) disallowance applies to a transferor, the transferee is permitted to exclude certain gain from gross income when the transferee transfers the property.¹⁴⁰⁸ The §267(a)(1) disallowance is discussed in detail in 527 T.M., Loss Deductions. Under §267A, no deduction is allowed for any dis-

2. Deductions Disallowed for Nontax Policy Reasons

a. Judicially Developed Disallowances

(1) In General

The Code contains several statutory nontax policy disallowance provisions discussed in IV.D.2.b. through IV.D.2.e., below. For deductions not specifically disallowed by these provisions, the IRS, in regulations, takes the position that a deduction for an expense that would otherwise be allowable as a deduction under §162 is not disallowed on the grounds that its allowance would frustrate a sharply defined public policy.¹⁴¹⁰ However, over the years, judicial doctrine has developed disallowing taxpayers to deduct an expense on the grounds that its allowance would frustrate a sharply defined public policy, discussed in IV.D.2.a.(2) through IV.D.2.a.(5), below.

(2) Scope of Application of Disallowance

Courts have taken the position that so long as a state statute is generally enforced, it can be the basis of a federal income tax deduction disallowance, even though it is not aggressively enforced.¹⁴¹¹ Courts have declined to impose a public policy disallowance if the taxpayer's actions were not a direct violation of a nontax law.¹⁴¹² Similarly, if the taxpayer's payment to another person is not violative of public policy, the fact that the payee, by accepting the payment, breaches a duty to a third party does not require that the taxpayer's deduction be disallowed.¹⁴¹³

(3) Illegal Business Activities

(a) Illegal Business

In Commissioner v. Sullivan,¹⁴¹⁴ the Supreme Court held that wages and rental deductions paid by a taxpayer operating an illegal bookmaking business were deductible, because they were ordinary and necessary expenses of the business.¹⁴¹⁵ The Court noted that the deductions would be disallowed if they were a device to avoid the consequences of violations of law or otherwise contravened federal policy.¹⁴¹⁶ In an earlier decision, the Tax Court had held that a taxpayer illegally selling whiskey could not treat the cost of confiscated liquor either as part of cost of goods sold or as a loss, based on public policy grounds.¹⁴¹⁷

Since the Sullivan decision, the courts have been somewhat inconsistent with respect to deductions paid or incurred in the conduct of an illegal trade or business, sometimes not disallowing the deductions solely because of the illegality,¹⁴¹⁸ and allowing deductions for otherwise deductible expenses paid or incurred by taxpayers engaged in operating illegal numbers games,¹⁴¹⁹ illegal lotteries,¹⁴²⁰ and illegal gambling enterprises.¹⁴²¹ The IRS has also refrained from disallowing deductions connected to an illegal activity, but that are not illegal in themselves,¹⁴²² such as arms sales commissions paid to foreign agents by a taxpayer who illegally concealed the payments that were not in and of themselves illegal.¹⁴²³ Yet, the Tax Court denied a deduction for illegal gambling proceeds forfeited to authorities by a bar owner who illegally operated a gambling enterprise.¹⁴²⁴ This result is consistent with other decisions denying a loss deduction for the value of illegal gambling devices seized by authorities,¹⁴²⁵ and with a decision denying a deduction for payments made to the government under a plea bargain made in response to charges of illegally smuggling freon into the country.¹⁴²⁶

Note: Under §280E, discussed in IV.D.2.b., below, the expenses paid or incurred in carrying on an illegal drug sale business are disallowed.¹⁴²⁷

(b) Transacting Business in Illegal Manner

The cost of extra bottles given to customers who purchased illegally at posted prices is included in cost of goods sold.¹⁴²⁸ A taxpayer who loaned money at usurious rates in violation of state law was allowed to deduct losses that arose when the state made collection of the loans illegal.¹⁴²⁹

(c) Rebates

No deduction is allowed for rebates and discounts illegally paid by a life insurance agent to policy buyers.¹⁴³⁰ In contrast, a deduction has been allowed for an insurance broker's illegal payment of the policy buyer's first-year premium, because the state insurance authority was aware of the taxpayer's practice.¹⁴³¹ The IRS has also ruled that price rebates granted by a taxpayer in order to meet competitor's prices while engaged in an illegal price-fixing conspiracy were included in cost of goods sold even though the taxpayer was convicted.¹⁴³² Additionally, incidental expenses paid or incurred to make illegal rebates were not disallowed on public policy grounds.¹⁴³³ Illegal cash payments to customers are adjustments to the sales price of merchandise.¹⁴³⁴

(d) Compensation in Furtherance of Illegal Purpose

The IRS has ruled that compensation paid to an arsonist to burn down a building is not deductible.¹⁴³⁵ The Tax Court has denied deductions for blackmail payments made to an employee who threatened to reveal information to customers who would have ceased doing business with the corporation had they known the information, noting that blackmail payments were not ordinary in the taxpayer's line of business.¹⁴³⁶

(e) Illegal Equipment

The IRS has ruled that depreciation deductions are allowable with respect to coin-operated gaming machines subsequently confiscated for the taxpayer's failure to register them.¹⁴³⁷

(4) Other Illegal Activities

The IRS and Tax Court have taken the position that no casualty loss deduction is allowed if the casualty is a fire started by the taxpayer's grossly negligent or intentional behavior.¹⁴³⁸ Similarly, no deduction is allowable for payments made by a taxpayer to a former lover under the threat by the former lover to inform the taxpayer's spouse about an affair, reflecting a public policy against government financing of failed extramarital affairs.¹⁴³⁹

(5) Racial Discrimination(a) Contributions to Schools

The IRS takes the position that no charitable contribution deduction is allowed with respect to contributions to private schools that have racially discriminatory policies.¹⁴⁴⁰ In 1979, Congress enacted legislation that prohibited the IRS from implementing any proposed revenue procedure that would have set up guidelines for reviewing the tax-exempt status of private schools to determine if they have racially discriminatory policies and that prohibited the IRS from spending money to revoke the tax-exempt status of, and thus make nondeductible, charitable contributions to private schools.¹⁴⁴¹

Injunctions had been issued suspending the charitable contribution deduction for contributions to certain schools¹⁴⁴² and requiring suspension of advance assurance of the deductibility of contributions to certain schools.¹⁴⁴³ The Supreme Court had held that a university could not obtain an injunction preventing the IRS from revoking its tax-exempt status on the grounds that it had racially discriminatory policies.¹⁴⁴⁴

The impact of public policy on the charitable contribution deduction is discussed in detail in 521 T.M., Charitable Contributions: Income Tax Aspects.

(b) Contributions to Governments

No deduction is allowable for a contribution of land to a government for use as a public recreational area that would otherwise be deductible if the donor restricts the use on a racially discriminatory basis.¹⁴⁴⁵

b. Expenses of Illegal Drug Sale Trade or Business(1) In General

Under §280E, no deduction is allowed for any amount paid or incurred during the tax year in carrying on any illegal drug sale trade or business.¹⁴⁴⁶ The enactment of §280E overruled cases in which drug dealers, drug smugglers, and others engaged in illegal drug trafficking were allowed to deduct compensation, repairs, telephone, rent, vehicle, and similar expenses paid or incurred in connection with their trafficking businesses.¹⁴⁴⁷

Section 280E disallows not only the deduction for trade or business expenses under §162, but all of the deductions specified in Part VI of Subchapter B of the Income Tax Subtitle of the Code, which includes the deductions under §162, §163,

§164, §165, §166, §167, §168, §169, and §170.¹⁴⁴⁸ The fact that an expenditure does not qualify as a business expenditure is irrelevant under §280E, which applies to any amount paid or incurred during the tax year in carrying on a trade or business that consists of trafficking in certain defined controlled substances.¹⁴⁴⁹

However, the §280E disallowance does not apply to the cost of goods sold,¹⁴⁵⁰ nor to exclusions from gross income.¹⁴⁵¹ It applies to the expenses of the taxpayer's illegal drug sale trade or business, but not to other trades or businesses of the taxpayer.¹⁴⁵²

The Tax Court has rejected taxpayer claims that, because a taxpayer's trade or business is not limited exclusively to the sale of cannabis items, its trade or business does not "consist of" trafficking in controlled substances within the meaning of §280E.¹⁴⁵³

The Tax Court also has rejected a taxpayer's argument that §280E does not disallow deductions for depreciation because depreciation is not an amount "paid or incurred during the taxable year."¹⁴⁵⁴

Similarly, the Tax Court has rejected a taxpayer's argument that §280E does not disallow deductions for charitable contributions made by a business because charitable contributions by a business are not paid or incurred "in carrying on" the trade or business.¹⁴⁵⁵

Also, no deduction is allowable for the value of illegal drug-dealing proceeds, other currency, or other property forfeited to the government, on the rationale that there exists a public policy against drug trafficking and against deductions for property forfeited under forfeiture statutes.¹⁴⁵⁶ Moreover, the forfeiture is comparable to a governmental fine and, thus, is not deductible.¹⁴⁵⁷

(2) Illegal Drug Sale Trade or Business

(a) In General

An illegal drug sale trade or business is any trade or business that satisfies two conditions.¹⁴⁵⁸ First, the trade or business, or the activities comprising the trade or business, must consist of trafficking in controlled substances.¹⁴⁵⁹ Second, that trafficking must be prohibited by federal law or the law of any state in which the trade or business is conducted.¹⁴⁶⁰ Trafficking in a controlled substance includes an organization's distribution of marijuana to its members for medical purposes.¹⁴⁶¹

States legalizing marijuana distribution businesses have caused conflict with the federal government pursuant to §280E. In Feinberg v. Commissioner,¹⁴⁶² Colorado state authorized the taxpayer to operate a marijuana distribution business. Also, the Department of Justice had twice instructed field prosecutors that they should generally decline to enforce federal drug trafficking laws when states like Colorado license marijuana distribution operations. However, the IRS still refused to recognize the taxpayer's claimed business expense deductions on the ground that the company is an illegal drug sale trade or business under federal law. Another point of contention arose when, although the taxpayer relied on state law to legitimize his marijuana distribution business, the taxpayer also invoked federal law to avoid self-incrimination, because of that business. The taxpayer argued that the Fifth Amendment prevented him from producing documents the IRS requested about the nature of his business, which it claimed was for the disputed deduction reason, but the court recognized it was the agency's attempt to obtain proof for §280E purposes, that the taxpayer was indeed illegally trafficking in marijuana.¹⁴⁶³

(b) Controlled Substance

Any substance that is a controlled substance within the meaning of Schedules I and II of the Controlled Substances Act¹⁴⁶⁴ is a controlled substance.¹⁴⁶⁵ For purposes of §280E, marijuana is a controlled substance.¹⁴⁶⁶

Note: The Treasury Inspector General for Tax Administration (TIGTA)'s report 2020-30-017, The Growth of the Marijuana Industry Warrants Increased Tax Compliance Efforts and Additional Guidance (Mar. 30, 2020), includes evaluation results of the IRS' examination and education approach to certain cash-based industries with an emphasis on legal marijuana operations. TIGTA reviewed three statistical random samples of marijuana businesses with a 2016 tax year filing requirement with likely §280E adjustments. It found that marijuana businesses in California, Oregon, and Washington states have a high rate of noncompliance with IRC §280E. TIGTA recommended that the IRS develop a comprehensive compliance approach for the marijuana industry, including a method to identify businesses in this industry and track examination results; develop and publicize guidance specific to the marijuana industry; leverage publicly available information at the state level and expand use of existing federal/state agreements to identify nonfilers and unreported income in the marijuana industry; and increase educational outreach towards unbanked taxpayers making cash deposits regarding the unbanked and relief policies available.

(3) In Carrying On

In Bratulich v. Commissioner,¹⁴⁶⁷ the Tax Court disallowed the travel expenses of a taxpayer, because they were incurred in carrying on a drug-dealing business and not for a fictitious gemstone business that the taxpayer had established to disguise his activities.¹⁴⁶⁸

c. Charitable Contributions on Behalf of Federal Employees

(1) In General

No deduction is allowable with respect to excludible amounts paid to a charitable organization¹⁴⁶⁹ on behalf of a federal government employee.¹⁴⁷⁰ The same provision also disallows any deduction under any state or local tax law.¹⁴⁷¹ The §7701(k)(2) disallowance is effective as of January 1, 1991.¹⁴⁷² It ceases to be effective if the provisions of §703 of the Ethics Reform Act of 1989¹⁴⁷³ are repealed.¹⁴⁷⁴

(2) Excludible Amount

An excludible amount is a payment which, except for §501(b) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978,¹⁴⁷⁵ might be made to a federal government employee, but which is instead paid to a charitable organization on behalf of the employee and is excludible from the employee's gross income.¹⁴⁷⁶

(3) Federal Government Employee

A federal government employee is any officer or employee of the federal government, including a senator, a representative in the Congress, a delegate to the Congress, and a resident commissioner to the Congress.¹⁴⁷⁷

d. Discriminatory Taxation of U.S. Persons

Under §896(b), the president has the power to disallow federal income tax deductions otherwise allowable to subjects, or a class of subjects, of a foreign country that is imposing discriminatory taxation on U.S. persons or a class of U.S. persons.¹⁴⁷⁸ This power is part of a broader power to disallow credits and exemptions and to increase tax rates on those subjects of a foreign country.¹⁴⁷⁹ For a detailed discussion of §896(b), see 506 T.M., Principles of Income Tax Credits.

e. Other Restrictions

Examples of other public policy restrictions include:

- The restrictions under §162 and §212,¹⁴⁸⁰ providing no deduction is allowable for any illegal government bribe or kickback,¹⁴⁸¹ illegal payment,¹⁴⁸² illegal Medicare payment,¹⁴⁸³ settlements subject to nondisclosure agreements paid in connection with sexual harassment or sexual abuse,¹⁴⁸⁴ or fine or similar penalty paid to a government for the violation of any law,¹⁴⁸⁵ discussed in detail in 524 T.M., Deductibility of Illegal Payments, Fines, and Penalties.

E. Deductions Disallowed for Failure to Continue Compliance with Conditions for Tax Benefit

1. Interest on Mortgage Financed with Mortgage Revenue Bond Proceeds

Under §150(b)(1), no deduction is allowed for disqualified interest on a mortgage financed with the proceeds of a tax-exempt qualified mortgage bond or qualified veterans' mortgage bond.¹⁴⁹³ Interest is disqualified interest if it accrues on or after the date a disqualified use period begins and before the date the disqualified use period ends.¹⁴⁹⁴ A disqualified use period is any continuous period of at least one year during which the residence securing the mortgage is not the principal residence of at least one of the mortgagors who received the mortgage proceeds.¹⁴⁹⁵ The §150(b)(1) disallowance does not apply to the extent the IRS determines that its application would result in undue hardship and that the disqualified use period exists because of circumstances beyond the mortgagor's control.¹⁴⁹⁶ The exclusion from gross income of interest on qualified mortgage bonds¹⁴⁹⁷ and qualified veterans' mortgage bonds¹⁴⁹⁸ is described in 501 T.M., Gross Income: Overview and Conceptual Aspects.

2. Interest on Mortgage Financed with Qualified Residential Rental Project Private Activity Bond Proceeds

Under §150(b)(2), no deduction is allowed for disqualified interest on a mortgage financed with the proceeds of an apparent residential rental project private activity bond.¹⁴⁹⁹ An apparent residential rental project private activity bond is a bond which, when issued, purported to be a tax-exempt private activity bond by virtue of being a tax-exempt facility bond¹⁵⁰⁰ because its proceeds were to be used for a qualified residential rental project.¹⁵⁰¹ Interest is disqualified interest if it accrues during the disqualified use period.¹⁵⁰² The disqualified use period begins on the first day of the tax year in which the project securing the mortgage fails to meet the qualified residential rental project requirements¹⁵⁰³ and ends on the date the project meets those requirements.¹⁵⁰⁴ The exclusion from gross income of interest on private activity bonds used to finance qualified residential rental projects and the qualified residential rental project requirements are described in 183 T.M., Tax-Advantaged Bonds.

3. Interest on Mortgage Financed with Qualified §501(c)(3) Bond Proceeds

Under §150(b)(3)(B), no deduction is allowed for disqualified interest on a mortgage financed with the proceeds of an apparent §501(c)(3) bond.¹⁵⁰⁵ An apparent §501(c)(3) bond is a bond which, when issued, purported to be a tax-exempt qualified §501(c)(3) bond.¹⁵⁰⁶ Thus, deductions were disallowed when bonds were issued with purported tax-exempt status but the financed facility was never used in a manner qualifying for tax-exempt financing.¹⁵⁰⁷

Interest is disqualified interest if it accrues during the disqualified use period.¹⁵⁰⁸ The disqualified use period begins on the date the facility securing the mortgage is used in a trade or business of any person other than a §501(c)(3) organization or governmental unit and ends on the date the facility is not so used.¹⁵⁰⁹

apparent private activity bond.¹⁵¹¹ An apparent private activity bond is a bond which, when issued, purported to be a tax-exempt private activity bond by virtue of being a tax-exempt facility bond¹⁵¹² because its proceeds were to be used for a qualified facility other than a qualified residential rental project or by virtue of being a qualified small issue bond.¹⁵¹³ Interest is disqualified interest if it accrues during the disqualified use period.¹⁵¹⁴ The disqualified use period begins on the date the facility securing the mortgage is not used for a purpose for which the tax-exempt private activity bond could be issued on the date of its issue, and ends when the facility is used for such a purpose.¹⁵¹⁵ The exclusion from gross income of interest on tax-exempt private activity bonds¹⁵¹⁶ is described in 183 T.M., Tax-Advantaged Bonds.

b. Failure to Continue Complying Ownership

Under §150(b)(5), no deduction is allowed for disqualified interest on a mortgage financed with the proceeds of an apparent private activity bond whose tax-exempt status depends, in part, on the facility securing the mortgage being owned by a governmental unit or a §501(c)(3) organization.¹⁵¹⁷ An apparent private activity bond is a bond which, when issued, purported to be a tax-exempt private activity bond.¹⁵¹⁸ Interest is disqualified interest if it accrues during the disqualified ownership period.¹⁵¹⁹ The disqualified ownership period begins on the date the facility securing the mortgage is not owned by a governmental unit or a §501(c)(3) organization and ends on the date the facility is so owned.¹⁵²⁰ The exclusion from gross income of interest on tax-exempt private activity bonds¹⁵²¹ is described in 183 T.M., Tax-Advantaged Bonds.

5. Interest on Mortgages Financed with Qualified Small Issue Bond Proceeds

Under §150(b)(6), no deduction is allowed for disqualified interest on a mortgage financed with the proceeds of an apparent qualified small issue bond.¹⁵²² An apparent qualified small issue bond is a bond which, when issued, purported to be a tax-exempt qualified small issue bond.¹⁵²³ Interest is disqualified interest if it accrues during the disqualification period.¹⁵²⁴ The disqualification period begins on the date the bond is not a qualified small issue bond and ends on the date the bond is again a qualified small issue bond.¹⁵²⁵ The exclusion from gross income of interest on tax-exempt qualified small issue bonds¹⁵²⁶ is described in 183 T.M., Tax-Advantaged Bonds.

F. Disallowance of Personal Deductions

1. Introduction

Under §262, a taxpayer is not allowed to deduct personal, living, or family expenses.¹⁵²⁷ These types of expenses are nondeductible, unless another IRC provision allows the deduction.¹⁵²⁸ To be nondeductible, an expense need only be within the scope of one of the §262 categories. Thus, for example, although funeral expenses are not “living” expenses as such, they nonetheless are personal and thus nondeductible.¹⁵²⁹

Observation: In many instances, the §262 deduction disallowance applies because the taxpayer has failed to persuade the IRS or the courts that the taxpayer is engaged in a trade or business or for-profit activity.¹⁵³⁰

Some expenditures that otherwise would be nondeductible personal expenditures can be deductible if they are required by the employer and are related to the job. In Sibla v. Commissioner,¹⁵³¹ the court stated that when conditions of employment restrict an employee’s discretion in typically personal choices, “that which may be a personal expense under some circumstances can, when prescribed by company regulations, directives, and conditions, lose its character as a personal expense and take on the color of a business expense.” For example, in PMTA 2009-068, the IRS National Office advised that costs incurred by employees to obtain the identification card required by the employer are deductible employee business expenses under §162 and that reimbursements made under the employer’s arrangement to reimburse its employees for the expenses incurred by them to obtain the identification cards will be treated as made under an accountable plan and will be excluded from the employees’ income and wages.

2. Insurance Policy Payments

a. In General

Subject to certain exceptions, no deduction is allowed for disqualified insurance policy payments that are otherwise deductible.¹⁵³² A disqualified insurance policy payment includes disqualified life insurance policy premiums, single premium insurance contract indebtedness interest, cash value funded insurance contract indebtedness interest, disqualified life insurance policy indebtedness interest, and unborrowed policy cash value interest. The fact that a payment is not a disqualified insurance policy payment does not make it deductible, because the §264 disallowance merely disallows amounts otherwise deductible under some other provision.¹⁵³³ The denial of the insurance premium deduction has two exceptions.¹⁵³⁴ A deduction for premiums is not denied for annuity contracts, such as those under certain qualified pension plans, certain retirement annuities, individual retirement annuities, and qualified funding assets, described in §72(s)(5).¹⁵³⁵ Nor is the deduction disallowed for annuity contracts, essentially those not held by natural persons, to which §72(u) applies.¹⁵³⁶

The §264 disallowance is described in IV.F.2.b., below, and is discussed, in part, in 386 T.M., Insurance-Related Compensation.

b. Types of Disqualified Insurance Policy Payments

(1) Disqualified Life Insurance Policy Premiums

Disqualified life insurance policy premiums are premiums paid on any life insurance policy, endowment contract, or annuity contract, with respect to which the taxpayer is, directly or indirectly, a beneficiary under the policy or contract.¹⁵³⁷ The IRS has advised that payments by a corporation to a Voluntary Employee Beneficiary Association (VEBA) that purchases life insurance to fund the VEBA's obligation to pay post-retirement benefits to the corporation's retirees are not payments by the corporation of life insurance premiums, leaving the corporation unaffected by §264.¹⁵³⁸

(2) Single Premium Insurance Contract Indebtedness Interest

Single-premium insurance contract indebtedness interest is any amount paid or accrued on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry a single-premium insurance contract.¹⁵³⁹ A single-premium insurance contract is any single-premium life insurance, endowment, or annuity contract.¹⁵⁴⁰ A contract is treated as a single-premium insurance contract if it satisfies either one of two conditions.¹⁵⁴¹ The first condition is satisfied if substantially all¹⁵⁴² the premiums on the contract are paid within a period of four years from the date on which the contract is purchased.¹⁵⁴³ The second condition is satisfied if an amount is deposited after March 1, 1954, with the insurer for payment of a substantial number of future premiums on the contract.¹⁵⁴⁴ The Tax Court has held that even if a policy is not treated as a single-premium policy under the predecessor of the first condition, the interest is nonetheless nondeductible if the policy is part of an arrangement through which the anticipated policy benefits fund the premium and interest costs, with the only economic value arising from tax savings, because the lack of economic substance and business purpose necessitates concluding that the arrangement is a sham transaction for which Congress has not indicated any intent to countenance.¹⁵⁴⁵

Note: For this purpose, an annuity contract does not include an annuity contract purchased before March 2, 1954.¹⁵⁴⁶

(3) Cash Value Funded Insurance Contract Indebtedness Interest

Cash value funded insurance contract indebtedness interest is any amount paid or accrued on indebtedness incurred or continued to purchase or carry a disqualified insurance contract pursuant to a disqualified borrowing plan.¹⁵⁴⁷ A disqualified insurance contract is any life insurance, endowment, or annuity contract that does not satisfy either one of two conditions.¹⁵⁴⁸ The first condition is satisfied if the contract is a single-premium insurance contract.¹⁵⁴⁹ The second condition is satisfied if the contract was purchased before August 7, 1963.¹⁵⁵⁰ A borrowing plan is a plan of purchase which contemplates the systematic direct or indirect¹⁵⁵¹ borrowing,¹⁵⁵² either from the insurer or otherwise, of part or all of the increases in the cash value of the contract.¹⁵⁵³ A disqualified borrowing plan is any borrowing plan that does not meet either the four-of-seven rule, or one of the other §264(d) exceptions to §264(a)(3),¹⁵⁵⁴ discussed in detail in 386 T.M., Insurance-Related Compensation.

(4) Disqualified Life Insurance Policy Indebtedness Interest

Disqualified life insurance policy indebtedness interest is any interest paid or accrued on any indebtedness with respect to one or more life insurance policies owned by the taxpayer and covering the life of any individual, any endowment contract owned by the taxpayer and covering any individual, or any annuity contract owned by the taxpayer and covering any individual.¹⁵⁵⁵ Disqualified life insurance policy indebtedness interest does not include any interest paid with respect to policies or contracts purchased before June 21, 1986.¹⁵⁵⁶ Disqualified life insurance policy indebtedness interest also does not include interest paid or accrued on indebtedness with respect to policies or contracts covering a key person to the extent that the aggregate amount of the indebtedness with respect to those policies and contracts does not exceed $50,000,¹⁵⁵⁷ discussed in detail in 386 T.M., Insurance-Related Compensation.

(5) Unborrowed Policy Cash Value Interest

(a) In General

The portion of interest expense allocable to unborrowed policy cash values is a disqualified insurance policy payment.¹⁵⁵⁸ Unborrowed policy cash value is the excess of the cash surrender value of a life insurance policy, endowment contract, or annuity contract, determined without regard to any surrender charge, over the amount of any loan with respect to that policy or contract.¹⁵⁵⁹ If the cash surrender value with respect to a policy or contract does not reasonably approximate its actual value, then, in lieu of that amount, the loan is subtracted from the greater of the insurance company liability or the insurance company reserve with respect to the policy or contract, as determined for purposes of the annual statement approved by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners or any other amount approved by the IRS.¹⁵⁶⁰

The portion of the taxpayer's interest expense allocable to unborrowed policy cash values equals the interest expense multiplied by a fraction.¹⁵⁶¹ The numerator of the fraction equals the taxpayer's average unborrowed policy cash values of life insurance policies, endowment contracts, and annuity contracts issued after June 8, 1997.¹⁵⁶² The denominator of the fraction equals the sum of the unborrowed policy cash values of the taxpayer's life insurance policies, endowment contracts, and annuity contracts¹⁵⁶³ plus the average adjusted bases¹⁵⁶⁴ of the taxpayer's other assets.¹⁵⁶⁵ Policies or contracts with respect to which the interest is not unborrowed policy cash value interest by reason of the exceptions described in (b), below, are excluded from this fraction.¹⁵⁶⁶ The denominator of this fraction is reduced, but not below zero, by the amount of any interest disallowed under any of the other insurance policy limitations or under the §265 limitations on deductions for interest relating to tax-exempt income.¹⁵⁶⁷

Interest expense equals the aggregate amount allowable as a deduction for interest without regard to the unborrowed policy cash value interest limitation, the §265(b) financial institution interest expense tax-exempt income allocation, or the §291 corporate preference item limitations.¹⁵⁶⁸ Interest disallowed under any of the other insurance policy limitations or under the §265 limitations on deductions for interest relating to tax-exempt income is not taken into account for purposes of the unborrowed policy cash value interest limitation.¹⁵⁶⁹ However, the unborrowed policy cash value interest limitation is applied before application of the produced property capitalization limitation.¹⁵⁷⁰

The application of the unborrowed policy cash values deduction limitation with respect to partnerships and S corporations is determined and computed at the partnership and corporate levels, respectively, and not at the partner or shareholder levels.¹⁵⁷¹ For purposes of applying the limitation, all members of a controlled group are treated as one taxpayer.¹⁵⁷² All persons treated as a single employer under the rules applicable to compensation-related credits¹⁵⁷³ or under the affiliated service group or qualified compensation grouping rules¹⁵⁷⁴ are treated as members of a controlled group.¹⁵⁷⁵ The limitation does not apply to insurance companies taxable under the insurance company taxation rules, and these companies are excluded from the application of the limitation to controlled groups.¹⁵⁷⁶

(b) Business Policy Exceptions

Unborrowed policy cash value interest does not include interest with respect to any policy or contract owned by an entity engaged in a trade or business if the policy or contract covers only one individual who, at the time first covered, is a 20% owner of the entity¹⁵⁷⁷ or is an officer, director, or employee of the trade or business.¹⁵⁷⁸ The fact that the policy or contract covers the joint lives of the individual and the individual's spouse does not prevent it from qualifying for this exception.¹⁵⁷⁹ For these purposes, any coverage under a master contract, other than group life insurance contracts, that is treated as a separate contract for purposes of §817(h), §7702, and §7702A is treated as a separate contract for purposes of determining whether this exception applies.¹⁵⁸⁰ If the insured under a new contract is no longer an employee, this exception does not apply.¹⁵⁸¹

For corporations, a 20% owner is any person who owns directly 20% or more of the outstanding stock of the corporation or stock possessing 20% or more of the total combined voting power of all the corporation's stock.¹⁵⁸² Otherwise, a 20% owner is any person who owns 20% or more of the capital or profits interest in the taxpayer.¹⁵⁸³

Unborrowed policy cash value interest does not include interest with respect to annuity contracts, essentially those not held by natural persons, to which §72(u) applies.¹⁵⁸⁴

(c) Natural Person Contracts

Unborrowed policy cash value interest does not include interest with respect to any policy or contract held by a natural person.¹⁵⁸⁵ A policy or contract which has a trade or business as a direct or indirect beneficiary is treated as held by that trade or business and not by a natural person.¹⁵⁸⁶ The preceding limitation does not apply to trades or businesses operated as sole proprietorships nor does it apply to the trade or business of performing services as an employee.¹⁵⁸⁷ The preceding limitation applies only to the extent of the benefit to which the trade or business is directly or indirectly entitled under the policy or contract.¹⁵⁸⁸

(6) Shrinkage of Life or Terminable Interest Income

Under §273, no deduction against life or terminable interest holder income is allowed for shrinkage, by whatever name called, in the value of a life or terminable interest due to the lapse of time.¹⁵⁸⁹ Life or terminable interest holder income is income paid under the laws of a state, the District of Columbia, a U.S. possession, or a foreign country to the holder of a life or terminable interest acquired by gift, bequest, or inheritance.¹⁵⁹⁰

The §273 disallowance does not apply to a life estate acquired by a spouse in exchange for relinquishing a remainder interest in community property, because that acquisition is by purchase.¹⁵⁹¹ It does apply to a life estate acquired in settlement of a claim against an estate because the settlement was in lieu of a gift or bequest.¹⁵⁹²

3. Other Disallowances

Personal deductions are disallowed for a variety of categories of expenditures, including entertainment, amusement, recreational activities, travel, food and beverage, certain business gifts, certain employee achievement awards, and certain taxes. Some important examples of these disallowances are listed below:

- Section 274(a), providing no deduction is allowed for expenses related to activities generally considered entertainment, amusement, or recreation, or for facilities used in connection with such activities,¹⁵⁹³ discussed in detail in 519 T.M., Travel, Transportation, Entertainment, Meal, and Gift Expenses;

- Section 274(n), providing 50% of the amount that would otherwise be deductible for food and beverage items is disallowed (subject to certain exceptions).¹⁵⁹⁴ Before the TC-JA, entertainment expenses were deductible, but limited to the 50% of the amount that would otherwise be deductible. Section 274(n) is discussed in detail in 520 T.M., Entertainment, Meals, Gifts, and Lodging — Deduction and Recordkeeping Requirements;

- Section 274(h), providing no deduction is allowed for disqualified foreign convention expenses that would otherwise be deductible¹⁵⁹⁷ under §162,¹⁵⁹⁸ no deduction is allowed for disqualified cruise ship convention expenses that would otherwise be deductible¹⁵⁹⁹ under §162,¹⁶⁰⁰ and no deduction is allowed for any expense allocable to a convention, seminar, or similar meeting that would otherwise be allowable¹⁶⁰¹ solely under §212,¹⁶⁰² discussed in detail in 519 T.M., Travel, Transportation, Entertainment, Meal, and Gift Expenses;

- Section 274(c), providing no deduction is allowed under §162 or §212 for the portion of specified foreign travel by an individual that is not allocable to a trade or business or for-profit activity,¹⁶⁰³ discussed in detail in 519 T.M., Travel, Transportation, Entertainment, Meal, and Gift Expenses;

G. Other Deduction Disallowances

1. Disallowance of Foreign Advertising Expenses

No deduction is allowed for any foreign advertising expenses otherwise deductible under §162(a).¹⁶¹⁴ Foreign advertising expenses are the expenses of an advertisement carried by a foreign broadcast undertaking located in a reciprocating country and directed primarily to a market in the United States.¹⁶¹⁵ A foreign broadcast undertaking includes, but is not limited to, radio and television stations.¹⁶¹⁶ A reciprocating country is a country that denies a similar deduction for the cost of advertising directed primarily to a market in the foreign country when placed with a U.S. broadcast undertaking.¹⁶¹⁷

2. Other Disallowances

Examples of other deduction disallowances include:

• No deduction is allowed on losses from wash sales that otherwise would be allowable,¹⁶¹⁸ discussed in detail in 186 T.M., Financial Instruments: Special Rules;

• No deduction otherwise allowable under §170, §545(b)(2), or §642(c),¹⁶¹⁹ is allowed for disqualified charitable contributions to disqualified organizations,¹⁶²⁰ discussed in detail in 458 T.M., Private Foundations and Public Charities — Termination and Special Rules (Sections 507 and 508) (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series);

V. Deductions Allowable to Individuals

A. Introduction

For individuals, certain deductions are allowed in the computation of adjusted gross income (AGI).¹⁶³⁰ All other deductions are itemized, except (1) the standard deduction, (2) the personal and dependency exemption deduction, (3) the qualified business income deduction, (4) the charitable contributions deduction for nonitemizers, (5) the no tax on tips deduction, (6) the no tax on overtime deduction, and (7) the no tax on car loan interest deduction.¹⁶³¹ Deductions that are allowed in computing AGI are commonly referred to as above-the-line deductions. Typically, taxpayers prefer above-the-line deductions because they are not subject to the overall limitation on itemized deductions discussed in V.C.8.j.(2), below. Taxpayers also prefer above-the-line deductions because these deductions reduce AGI, which is used to limit various expenses or as a basis for determining other taxable amounts.

Important examples of the AGI limitations on deductions include:¹⁶³²

- restriction on the deduction from AGI of employee expenses of certain performing artists;¹⁶³³
- phaseout of the exclusion for interest on U.S. savings bonds used to pay higher-education tuition and fees;¹⁶³⁴
- phaseout of the exclusion for employer-paid adoption expenses;¹⁶³⁵
- limitations on the net casualty losses deduction;¹⁶³⁶
- caps on an individual's charitable contribution deduction;¹⁶³⁷
- limitation on the medical expense deduction;¹⁶³⁸
- phaseout of the deduction for contributions to individual qualified retirement plans;¹⁶³⁹
- phaseout of the deduction for education loan interest;¹⁶⁴⁰
- phaseout of the amount that may be contributed to a Roth IRA;¹⁶⁴¹
- phaseout of the actively managed rental real estate exception to the passive loss deduction limitation;¹⁶⁴² and
- phaseout of the amount that an individual may contribute to a Coverdell education savings account.¹⁶⁴³

B. Above-the-Line Deductions

1. Deductions Attributable to Carrying on a Trade or Business

a. In General

Deductions attributable to carrying on a trade or business¹⁶⁴⁴ are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁶⁴⁵ For example, under §162(a), a deduction is allowed for ordinary and necessary expenses attributable to carrying on a trade or business. Other sections allow deductions for trade or business interest,¹⁶⁴⁶ certain taxes paid,¹⁶⁴⁷ trade or business losses,¹⁶⁴⁸ and business bad debts.¹⁶⁴⁹ An individual taxpayer reports these allowable trade or business deductions incurred as a sole proprietor on Form 1040, Schedule C, Profit or Loss from Business. However, deductions attributable to carrying on a trade or business do not include those allowed under §211 through §223.¹⁶⁵⁰ They also do not include those paid or incurred in carrying on the trade or business of being an employee.¹⁶⁵¹ But the practice of a profession, not as an employee, is the conduct of a trade or business.¹⁶⁵² For a detailed discussion on trade or business expenses, see 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions.

b. Direct Attribution

Expenses attributable to carrying on a trade or business are allowable as deductions in computing adjusted gross income (AGI) if they are directly attributable to the trade or business or to property from which rents or royalties are derived.¹⁶⁵³ Thus, wagering losses incurred by full-time gamblers who gamble for their own account are allowable in computing AGI, because they arise from the carrying on of a trade or business.¹⁶⁵⁴ However, if an individual is not carrying on a trade or business as a gambler, wagering losses are not deductible in computing AGI but instead are deductible as an itemized deduction.¹⁶⁵⁵ For tax years beginning in 2018 through 2025, all deductions for expenses incurred in carrying out wagering transactions, and not just gambling losses, are limited to the extent of gambling winnings.¹⁶⁵⁶ For tax years beginning after 2025, wagering loss deductions (including related expenses incurred in carrying out wagering transactions) are limited to 90% of wagering losses incurred during the tax year, and also limited to the extent of gambling winnings.¹⁶⁵⁷

Rebates paid by a stockbroker to clients who generate commission gross income for the stockbroker are allowable in computing AGI.¹⁶⁵⁸

c. Interest

Interest on a loan is allowable as a deduction in computing adjusted gross income if the proceeds are used in the taxpayer's business,¹⁶⁵⁹ but not if used to acquire a business¹⁶⁶⁰ or to make personal investments.¹⁶⁶¹ The IRS takes the position that interest on state and federal income tax deficiencies is not allowable in computing adjusted gross income, even if the taxes relate to trade or business income.¹⁶⁶² Thus, if a taxpayer incurs interest for the underpayment of his federal income taxes attributable to his business income, the taxpayer would not be allowed to deduct the interest paid to the federal government.¹⁶⁶³ For further discussion on the deduction of interest, see 536 T.M., Interest Expense Deduction.

d. Taxes

Certain taxes incurred in a trade or business are deductible.¹⁶⁶⁴ Sales and use taxes, other than those that must be capitalized,¹⁶⁶⁵ are allowable in computing adjusted gross income to the extent they relate to purchases made for items used in the taxpayer's trade or business.¹⁶⁶⁶ Also, state taxes on gross business income are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁶⁶⁷ This principle applies to the Indiana gross income tax, to the extent applicable to the receipt of business income.¹⁶⁶⁸ It also applies to the New Hampshire business profits tax, which is not a state tax on net income.¹⁶⁶⁹ However, state taxes on net income are not allowable in computing adjusted gross income, even though the income on which they are imposed is derived from the taxpayer's trade or business.¹⁶⁷⁰ This principle applies to the Cincinnati tax on net business profits,¹⁶⁷¹ the Indiana adjusted gross income tax imposed on net income,¹⁶⁷² and to income taxes imposed on residents of Nevada by Alabama, California, Colorado, Louisiana, Michigan, Mississippi, New Mexico, Oklahoma, and Utah with respect to net royalty income received by the Nevada residents from oil and gas wells located in those states.¹⁶⁷³ It applies to the Louisville, Kentucky, license fee on 1% of all business profits to the extent imposed on compensation, but not to the extent imposed on partnership or proprietorship profits, even though the fee is a tax.¹⁶⁷⁴ For further discussion of the deductibility of taxes, see 525 T.M., State, Local, and Federal Taxes.

e. Tax Litigation Expenses

Ordinary and necessary¹⁶⁷⁵ litigation expenses paid or incurred with respect to disputes over taxes imposed on business income are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁶⁷⁶ For a detailed discussion on the ordinary and necessary requirement, see 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions.

f. Losses

Under §165(a), an individual can deduct a loss that is incurred in a trade or business.¹⁶⁷⁷ Net operating losses and deductions for the expense of worthless business property also are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁶⁷⁸ For a detailed discussion of the deductibility of trade or business losses, see 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions.

g. Bad Debt

Individual taxpayers are allowed to deduct the amount of any business debt that becomes partially or wholly worthless during the tax year.¹⁶⁷⁹ Individual taxpayers are also allowed to deduct any nonbusiness bad debt only when it becomes wholly worthless.¹⁶⁸⁰ Unlike business bad debts that are allowable in computing adjusted gross income, nonbusiness bad debts are reported as a short-term capital loss on Form 8949, Sales and

2. Reimbursed Employee Trade or Business Deductions

a. In General

Generally, deductions allowed under §162 through §198 in connection with the performance of services as an employee, under a reimbursement or other expense allowance arrangement with the employer, are allowable in computing adjusted gross income (AGI).¹⁶⁸¹ It does not matter that the reimbursement is provided by a third party, provided the employee performs a benefit for the third party as an employee of the employer.¹⁶⁸²

Although the IRC establishes the structure of including reimbursed employee business expenses in the employee's gross income and then allowing a deduction in computing AGI,¹⁶⁸³ the regulations provide for a simplified reporting method that reaches the same result by excluding the reimbursement amounts from gross income and eliminating the need for a corresponding deduction.¹⁶⁸⁴ The regulations allow this simplified reporting method for "accountable" reimbursement plans.¹⁶⁸⁵

Example: An employee incurs a $1,000 business expense and the employer reimburses the employee as part of an accountable plan. If the employee includes the $1,000 in his gross income, the employee is allowed a $1,000 above-the-line deduction. However, under the simplified reporting method, the reimbursement is not reported as income to the employee and the employee does not take a deduction. Both approaches reach the same result.

For further discussion of employee reimbursement plans, see 519 T.M., Travel, Transportation, Entertainment, Meal, and Gift Expenses.

b. Unreimbursed Employee Business Expenses

If there is no reimbursement arrangement, the deductions are not allowable under §62(a)(2) in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁶⁸⁶ Otherwise deductible unreimbursed employee business expenses, which have been specifically identified as not allowable in computing adjusted gross income, include books,¹⁶⁸⁷ business gifts,¹⁶⁸⁸ cash register shortage repayments,¹⁶⁸⁹ dues for technical society memberships¹⁶⁹⁰ and professional associations,¹⁶⁹¹ educational expenses,¹⁶⁹² entertainment expenses,¹⁶⁹³ legal fees,¹⁶⁹⁴ license fees on wages and salaries,¹⁶⁹⁵ malpractice insurance premiums,¹⁶⁹⁶ medical examination costs,¹⁶⁹⁷ office expenses and supplies,¹⁶⁹⁸ postal supervisor expenses,¹⁶⁹⁹ professional fees¹⁷⁰⁰ and expenses,¹⁷⁰¹ storage,¹⁷⁰² subscriptions,¹⁷⁰³ technical journals and data,¹⁷⁰⁴ tools,¹⁷⁰⁵ tax preparation and legal fees,¹⁷⁰⁶ travel expenses,¹⁷⁰⁷ uniforms,¹⁷⁰⁸ union dues and assessments,¹⁷⁰⁹ and work clothing.¹⁷¹⁰

c. Reimbursement or Other Expense Allowance Arrangement

An accountable reimbursement plan is a reimbursement plan or arrangement that satisfies three conditions.¹⁷¹¹ First, the business connection condition requires advances, allowances, or reimbursements be made only for business expenses that are allowable as deductions and incurred by the employee in performance of services as an employee of the employer.¹⁷¹² Second, the substantiation condition requires the employee to substantiate, within a reasonable period of time, the expenses covered by the arrangement to the person providing the reimbursement.¹⁷¹³ Third, the excess nonretention condition requires the employee to not retain any amount in excess of the substantiated expenses covered under the arrangement and must return the amount within a reasonable period of time.¹⁷¹⁴

A reimbursement plan that does not satisfy all three conditions is classified as a nonaccountable plan.¹⁷¹⁵ Employers are permitted to have more than one arrangement with any one employee.¹⁷¹⁶ Determining whether a plan satisfies the three conditions is done on an employee-by-employee basis.¹⁷¹⁷ An employer may be treated as having both an accountable and a nonaccountable plan.¹⁷¹⁸ An employee receiving reimbursements under a nonaccountable plan cannot cause the plan to be recharacterized as an accountable plan with respect to that employee by voluntarily complying with the requirements for an accountable plan.¹⁷¹⁹

For an in-depth discussion of accountable and nonaccountable plans, see 519 T.M., Travel, Transportation, Entertainment, Meal, and Gift Expenses.

3. Certain Performing Artist Deductions

a. In General

Deductions allowed under §162 that consist of expenses paid or incurred by a qualified performing artist in connection with the performance of services in the performing arts as an employee are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷²⁰ An individual is not treated as performing services in the performing arts as an employee for an employer during any tax year unless the amount received by the individual from the employer for the performance is at least $200.¹⁷²¹

b. Qualified Performing Artist

(1) In General

A qualified performing artist is any individual who, for the tax year, satisfies three conditions.¹⁷²² First, the individual must perform services in the performing arts as an employee during the tax year for at least two employers,¹⁷²³ but an employer cannot be considered unless the individual earns at least $200 during the tax year from that employer.¹⁷²⁴ Second, the aggregate amount of §162 trade or business expenses allowable in connection with the performance of the services must exceed 10% of the individual's gross income attributable to the performance of those services.¹⁷²⁵ Third, the individual's adjusted gross income, determined without regard to the performing artist deduction provision, must not exceed $16,000.¹⁷²⁶ For this purpose, adjusted gross income includes adjusted gross income from all sources and is not limited to adjusted gross income from acting activities.¹⁷²⁷

(2) Application to Married Individuals

Married individuals¹⁷²⁸ are within the performing artist provision only if they file joint income tax returns.¹⁷²⁹ If the married individuals file a joint return, each spouse must separately meet the first condition of performing services in the performing arts for at least two employers.¹⁷³⁰ Each spouse also must separately meet the second condition that the amount allowable as a deduction must exceed 10% of his or her performing arts income.¹⁷³¹ However, the $16,000 limit on adjusted gross income¹⁷³² applies to the spouses' combined adjusted gross income.¹⁷³³

Example: B and C are married and file a joint return. B and C are performing artists and each are employed by two separate employers. Both B and C earn $2,000 with each employer. B's total §162 expense incurred as a performing artist is $500. C's total §162 expense incurred as a performing artist is $600. B and C's total adjusted gross income for the year is $15,900. Both B and C meet the first condition, because each of them are employed as a performing artist by at least two employers. The second condition is met because: (1) B's $500 performing artist expense exceeds 10% of his $4,000 gross income attributable to his performance of such services ($$4,000 \times 10\% = \400) and (2) C's $600 performing artist expense exceeds 10% of her $4,000 gross income attributable to her performance of such services ($$4,000 \times 10\% = \400). Finally, the third condition is met. B and C do not have in excess of $16,000 of combined adjusted gross income before taking into account their §162 deductions. Accordingly, B and C satisfy all three conditions; therefore, B and C are qualified performing artist and are allowed a $1,100 performing artist deduction.

Note: This limitation does not apply if the married individuals live apart at all times during the tax year.¹⁷³⁴

4. Certain Public Official Expenses

Deductions under §162 that consist of expenses paid or incurred with respect to services performed by a public official in a position compensated in whole or in part on a fee basis are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷³⁵ A public official is an official of a state government or a political subdivision of a state. In Jones v. Commissioner,¹⁷³⁶ the Tax Court determined what is meant for a public official to be "compensated ¹⁷³⁵ §62(a)(2)(C).

¹⁷³⁶ 146 T.C. 39 (2016). The Tax Court in Jones noted that it could be reasonable to read §62(a)(2)(C) as permitting a segregation of expenses for public officials compensated in part on a fee basis, which would allow them to deduct above the line those expenses incurred to produce fee income, but treating them like all other employees when it comes to any other employee's business expenses. This interpretation did not apply to the judge, because he admitted to waiving fees that he could have collected for marrying couples.

on a fee basis” pursuant to §62(a)(2)(C). The court referred to Rev. Rul. 74-608 and other federal laws for guidance, and ultimately agreed with the IRS’s interpretation that a public official is compensated by fees if the official receives them directly from a member of the public, but not if it is paid from a government fund. By that definition, the taxpayer, a county judge, was not considered to be compensated on a fee basis, because he was not paid directly by the public for services he rendered. Accordingly, the court held that §62(a)(2)(C) was inapplicable and the judge could deduct his unreimbursed employee business expenses only as miscellaneous itemized deductions.¹⁷³⁷

5. Certain Expenses of Elementary and Secondary School Teachers

a. In General

Deductions for qualified business expenses of teachers and other eligible educators are allowable in computing adjusted gross income,¹⁷³⁸ but only to the extent the amount of such expenses exceeds the amount excludible under §135 (income from U.S. savings bonds used to pay higher education tuition and fees), §529(c)(1) (qualified tuition program), or §530(d)(2) (Coverdell education savings accounts) for the tax year.¹⁷³⁹ The amount of the deduction that is allowable in computing adjusted gross income is limited to $250 each year, adjusted annually for inflation beginning in 2016.¹⁷⁴⁰

b. Eligible Educator

An eligible educator is an individual who is a kindergarten through grade 12 teacher, instructor, counselor, principal, or aide in a school for at least 900 hours during a school year.¹⁷⁴¹ A school is any school which provides elementary education or secondary education, as determined under state law, with elementary or secondary education being defined as kindergarten through grade 12.¹⁷⁴²

c. Qualified Business Expense

Qualified business expenses are amounts that satisfy three conditions.¹⁷⁴³ First, the expense must be paid or incurred in connection with professional development courses,¹⁷⁴⁴ books, supplies, computer equipment and related software and services, supplementary materials used in the classroom by the eligible educator,¹⁷⁴⁵ or personal protective equipment, disinfectant, and other supplies used for the prevention of the spread of COVID-19 in the classroom.¹⁷⁴⁶ Second, the expense must not be for nonathletic supplies for courses of instruction in health or physical education.¹⁷⁴⁷ Third, the expense must otherwise be deductible under §162 as a trade or business expense.¹⁷⁴⁸

6. Overnight Travel Expenses of Military Reservists

a. In General

Qualified travel expenses paid or incurred by individuals in connection with qualified military reserve services are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁴⁹

b. Qualified Military Services

Qualified military reserve services are services that satisfy two conditions.¹⁷⁵⁰ First, they must be performed by a taxpayer who is a member of a reserve component of the United States Armed Forces.¹⁷⁵¹ Second, their performance must occur for a period during which the taxpayer is more than 100 miles away from home in connection with the services.¹⁷⁵²

c. Qualified Travel Expenses

Qualified travel expenses are amounts that satisfy two conditions.¹⁷⁵³ First, the amount of travel expenses that qualify for this above-the-line deduction may not exceed the federal per diem rate authorized for the locality of the travel.¹⁷⁵⁴ Second, the expenses must otherwise be deductible under §162 as trade or business expenses.¹⁷⁵⁵

For an in-depth discussion on the deductibility of overnight travel expenses of military reservists, see 519 T.M., Travel, Transportation, Entertainment, Meal, and Gift Expenses.

7. Losses from Sales or Exchanges of Property

Deductions allowed under §162 through §198 as losses from the sale or exchange of property are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁵⁶

8. Deductions Attributable to Rents and Royalties

9. Life Tenant and Income Beneficiary Deductions

Any deduction for depreciation under §167 or for depletion under §611 allowed to a life tenant of property or the income beneficiary of property held in trust or an heir, legatee, or devisee of an estate is allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁶¹

10. Self-Employed Individuals' Retirement Plan Deductions

Any deduction allowed under §404 with respect to a self-employed individual's pension, profit-sharing, annuity, or other qualified retirement plan is allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁶² For an in-depth discussion on the §404 deduction, see 371 T.M., Employee Plans — Deductions, Contributions and Funding and 385 T.M., Deferred Compensation Arrangements.

11. Retirement Savings Deductions

Any deduction allowed under §219 with respect to retirement savings is allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁶³

12. Premature Withdrawal Penalty Deductions

Any deduction allowed under §165 for a premature withdrawal penalty is allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁶⁴ A premature withdrawal penalty is a loss arising from a transaction entered into for profit, though not connected with a trade or business, to the extent that those losses include amounts forfeited to a financial institution as a penalty for premature withdrawal of funds from a time savings account, certificate of deposit, or similar class of deposit.¹⁷⁶⁵ A financial institution is any bank, mutual savings bank, savings and loan association, building and loan association, cooperative bank, or homestead association.¹⁷⁶⁶

13. Alimony and Alimony Recapture Deduction

For divorce or separation instruments executed after December 31, 2018 (or a modification of divorce or separation instruments executed before that date but modified after, where the modification expressly provides the new tax treatment shall apply), alimony paid is not deductible and alimony received is not income.¹⁷⁶⁷ For divorce or separation instruments executed before December 31, 2018 (or a modification of divorce or separation instruments executed before that date but modified after, where the modification does not expressly provides the new tax treatment shall apply), a deduction under §215 for alimony paid is allowed in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁶⁸ Also, the deduction allowed to a payee who received alimony and with respect to whose payor the alimony recapture provisions apply is allowed in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁶⁹ For an in-depth discussion on alimony and alimony recapture, see 515 T.M., Divorce and Separation.

14. Reforestation Expenditure Deductions

The deduction allowed under §194 for reforestation expenditures is allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁷⁰ For an in-depth discussion on the reforestation expenditure deduction, see 610 T.M., Timber Transaction.

15. Certain Supplemental Unemployment Compensation Benefit Repayment Deductions

Any deduction allowed under §165 for the repayment to a trust of supplemental unemployment compensation benefits is allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁷¹ The deduction is allowed for a repayment to a §501(c)(9) or §501(c)(17) trust of supplemental unemployment benefits received from the trust that is required, because trade readjustment allowances under §231 or §232 of the Trade Act of 1974¹⁷⁷² were received.¹⁷⁷³

16. Remitted Jury Pay

In computing adjusted gross income, an employee may deduct jury pay that is remitted to the employer.¹⁷⁷⁴ This rule applies if the employee must remit the jury fees in exchange for the employer continuing to pay the employee wages or salary during the period of jury service.¹⁷⁷⁵ Jury pay is any payment received by an individual for the discharge of jury duty.¹⁷⁷⁶

17. Clean Fuel Vehicle and Refueling Property Deduction

For tax years beginning before January 1, 2015, the deduction allowed under former §179A for the cost of any qualified

18. Moving Expense Deduction

For any tax year beginning after 2017, the moving expense deduction is only available to active duty Armed Forces members who move pursuant to a military order and incident to a permanent change of station; and, for tax years beginning after 2025, to an employee or new appointee of the intelligence community who relocates due to a change in assignment.¹⁷⁷⁸ Otherwise, the deduction allowed under §217 for certain moving expenses is allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁷⁹ For further discussion of the moving expenses deduction, see 519 T.M., Travel, Transportation, Entertainment, Meal, and Gift Expenses.

19. Medical Savings Account Contributions Deduction

The deduction allowed under §220 for Archer medical savings account contributions is allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁸⁰ For a further discussion of the deductibility of Archer medical savings account contributions, see 330 T.M., Tax and ERISA Implications of Employer-Provided Medical and Disability Benefits.

20. Education Loan Interest Deduction

The deduction allowed under §221 for certain interest on education loans is allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁸¹ For further discussion on the deductibility of education loan interest, see 517 T.M., Educational Expenses and Credits.

21. Former Higher Education Expense Deduction

The deduction allowed under former §222 for qualified tuition and related expenses was allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁸² The deduction applies for tax years beginning before January 1, 2021.¹⁷⁸³ For further discussion on the deductibility of higher education expenses, see 517 T.M., Educational Expenses and Credits.

22. Health Savings Account Deductions

The deduction allowed under §223 for amounts paid to health savings accounts is allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁸⁴ For a further discussion of health saving account deductions, see 330 T.M., Tax and ERISA Implications of Employer-Provided Medical and Disability Benefits.

23. Certain Attorney Fee and Court Cost Deductions

Any deduction allowable under §1 through former §1400T for attorney fees and court costs that satisfy two conditions are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁸⁵ First, the fees and costs must be paid by, or on behalf of, the taxpayer.¹⁷⁸⁶ Second, they must be paid in connection with any action involving a claim of unlawful discrimination, a claim of a violation of 31 U.S.C. §3721 et seq., or a claim made under §1862(b)(3)(A) of the Social Security Act.¹⁷⁸⁷ Only the portion of the fees and costs that do not exceed the amount includible in the taxpayer's gross income for the tax year on account of a judgment or settlement, whether by suit or agreement and whether as lump sum or periodic payments, resulting from the claim are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁷⁸⁸

A claim of unlawful discrimination is a claim that an act is unlawful under any of the following provisions.¹⁷⁸⁹

- §302 of the Civil Rights Act of 1991;¹⁷⁹⁰
- §201, §202, §203, §204, §205, §206, or §207 of the Congressional Accountability Act of 1995;¹⁷⁹¹

Note: For amounts paid or incurred, after December 22, 2017, for settlements or payments or attorney’s fees related to sexual harassment or sexual abuse no deduction is allowed if the settlement or payment is subject to a nondisclosure agreement.¹⁸⁰⁹

Additionally, any attorney fees or court costs paid by, or on behalf of, the taxpayer in connection with an award under §7623(b), relating to tax whistleblower awards, are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁸¹⁰ Only the portion of the fees and costs that do not exceed the amount includible in the taxpayer’s gross income for the tax year on account such award, are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁸¹¹ For an in-depth discussion of the §7623(b) whistleblower award, see 632 T.M., Tax Whistleblower Laws and Programs.

Observation: The allowance of attorney fees and court costs as deductions in the computation of adjusted gross income is designed to prevent situations in which limitations on itemized deductions reduce the amount of the deduction and cause the taxpayer’s taxable income to increase by more than the net award received by the taxpayer. Unfortunately, the same situation can arise when taxpayers are successful in other types of litigation, but in those situations the taxpayer is not permitted to use the deduction in computing adjusted gross income because they do not involve discrimination claims.

24. Charitable Contributions

For tax years beginning in 2020 only, an above-the-line deduction for the amount (not to exceed $300) of qualified charitable contributions made by an eligible individual during the tax year was allowed in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁸¹² An “eligible individual” is any individual who does not elect to itemize deductions.¹⁸¹³ A “qualified charitable contribution” is any charitable contribution (as defined by §170(c)) which is made in cash, for which a deduction is allowed under §170, and which is made to an organization described in §170(b)(1)(A).¹⁸¹⁴

For discussion of charitable contribution deductions by non-itemizers as below-the-line deductions, see V.C.5., below. For further discussion of charitable deductions and contributions, see 521 T.M., Charitable Contributions: Income Tax Aspects.

25. Certain Personal Casualty Losses

Personal casualty losses in excess of personal casualty gains are deductible if attributable to a federally declared disaster in tax years beginning after 2017 and before 2026, and if attributable to a federally declared disaster or a state declared disaster in tax years beginning after 2025 — subject to a $100 per casualty floor, and to the extent that the amount of excess personal casualty losses exceeds 10% of the individual’s AGI.¹⁸¹⁵

For a detailed discussion of the deductibility of personal casualty losses, the definition of “personal casualty loss,” and the definition of “federally declared disaster,” see 527 T.M., Loss Deductions.

26. Housing Cost While Living Abroad

The deduction for housing costs that are allowed with respect to a U.S. citizen or resident who is employed abroad and who does not receive a housing cost allowance from his or her employer is allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁸¹⁶ For further discussion of the deduction of housing cost while living abroad, see 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions.

¹⁸¹⁴ Former §62(f)(2). Contributions made to §509(a)(3) organizations or made for the establishment of a new, or maintenance of an existing, donor advised fund (as defined in §4966(d)(2)), are not “qualified charitable contributions.” Former §62(f)(2)(ii)(II).

¹⁸¹⁵ §165(h)(5)(A), amended by the One Big Beautiful Bill Act (OBBBA), Pub. L. No. 119-21, §70109, applicable to tax years beginning after December 31, 2025; §165(h)(1), §165(h)(2)(A). Personal casualty losses are deductible to the extent of personal casualty gains. §165(h)(5)(B), amended by the OBBBA, §70109.

¹⁸¹⁶ §911(c)(4)(A).

27. Deductions for Losses from Marketable Stock Subject to Mark-to-Market Rules

The deduction allowed under §1296(a)(2) with respect to annual losses on marketable stock in passive foreign investment companies and under §1296(c)(1)(B)(ii) for losses from the dispositions of that marketable stock are allowable in computing adjusted gross income.¹⁸¹⁷ For further discussion of the deduction for losses from marketable stock subject to mark-to-market rules, see 6300 T.M., PFICs (Foreign Income Series).

28. Deduction for Qualified Overtime Compensation (2025–2028)

For tax years beginning in 2025–2028, taxpayers may deduct up to $12,500 ($25,000 joint return) in qualified overtime compensation.¹⁸¹⁸ The annual deduction is phased out (but not below zero) by $100 for each $1,000 by which the taxpayer's modified adjusted gross income (MAGI) exceeds $150,000 ($300,000 joint return).¹⁸¹⁹ Qualified overtime compensation does not include §224(d) qualified tips.¹⁸²⁰

A valid social security number must be included on taxpayer's return.¹⁸²¹ A married taxpayer must file a joint return to claim the deduction.¹⁸²²

A transition rule applies to reporting periods before January 1, 2026, allowing qualified overtime compensation accounting by any reasonable method specified by the Secretary.¹⁸²³

The deduction is available to both itemizers and non-itemizers.¹⁸²⁴

The deduction for qualified overtime compensation is reported on Schedule 1-A (Form 1040, Form 1040-SR, or Form 1040-NR).

For a detailed discussion of the deduction for qualified overtime compensation, see V.C.7., below.

29. Deduction for Qualified Tips (2025–2028)

For tax years beginning in 2025–2028, individuals other than highly compensated employees may deduct up to $25,000 of qualified tips, subject to a phaseout of $100 for every $1,000 modified adjusted gross income exceeds $150,000 ($300,000 for joint filers).¹⁸²⁵

¹⁸¹⁸ §225(a)–§225(c), added by the One Big Beautiful Bill Act (OBBBA), Pub. L. No. 119-21, §70202(a). Qualified overtime compensation is overtime pay required under the Fair Labor Standards Act, §7, in excess of the regular pay rate.

¹⁸¹⁹ §225(b)(2), added by the OBBBA, §70202(a). MAGI under §225 equals adjusted gross income plus certain exclusions for living abroad, in a U.S. territory, or Puerto Rico.

¹⁸²⁰ §225(c)(2), added by the OBBBA, §70202(a).

¹⁸²¹ §225(d), added by the OBBBA, §70202(a). SSN is defined by reference to §24(h)(7), which requires the SSN to be issued to a citizen before the tax return's due date.

¹⁸²⁵ §224, added by the One Big Beautiful Bill Act (OBBBA), Pub. L. No. 119-21, §70201(a). Qualified tips must be reported on statements provided to the taxpayer under §6041(d)(3), §6041A(e)(3), §6050W(f)(2), or §6051(a)(18), or by the taxpayer on Form 4137, Social Security and Medicare Tax On Unreported Tip Income.

The deduction for qualified tips is available to both itemizers and non-itemizers.¹⁸²⁶

The deduction for qualified tips is reported on Schedule 1-A (Form 1040, Form 1040-SR, or Form 1040-NR).

30. Enhanced Deduction for Seniors (2025–2028)

For tax years 2025 through 2028, qualified seniors can deduct up to $6,000, subject to a 6% phaseout for the amount modified adjusted gross income (MAGI) exceeds $75,000 ($150,000 for joint filers).¹⁸²⁷ Married joint filers can each take the deduction if both individuals are at least 65 years old by the end of the year. The deduction is available to non-itemizing and itemizing taxpayers.¹⁸²⁸ The enhanced deduction for seniors is reported on Schedule 1-A (Form 1040, Form 1040-SR, or Form 1040-NR) and is discussed in detail in 513 T.M., Family and Household Transactions.

C. Below-the-Line Deductions

1. Introduction

In calculating taxable income, an individual is only allowed above-the-line deductions, discussed in V.B., above, and either the deductions listed in §63(b), discussed in V.C.3. through V.C.7., below, or itemized deductions, discussed in V.C.8., below. The standard deduction is not allowable if the taxpayer elects to itemize deductions.¹⁸²⁹ The election to itemize is made on the taxpayer's return by completing Schedule A.¹⁸³⁰ If the taxpayer fails to substantiate itemized deductions exceeding the standard deduction, the election is disregarded.¹⁸³¹ A taxpayer who fails to file a return loses the opportunity to itemize deductions.¹⁸³² A taxpayer may change the election to itemize deductions after filing the return.¹⁸³³ The change of election does not extend the statute of limitations for claiming a credit or refund of tax with respect to the tax year.¹⁸³⁴ Thus, a taxpayer who did not elect to itemize deductions, but later discovers additional itemized deductions, may make the election on any timely filed amended return. Likewise, a taxpayer who elected to itemize deductions whose return is audited and deductions disallowed may revoke the election and claim the standard deduction.¹⁸³⁵

Additional rules apply if the taxpayer's spouse filed a separate return for the tax year.¹⁸³⁶ The taxpayer may not change his or her election to itemize unless two conditions are satisfied.¹⁸³⁷ First, the spouse must change the election for the tax year consistent with the taxpayer's change.¹⁸³⁸ Second, the taxpayer and spouse must consent in writing to the extension of the time for the assessment of any deficiency, to the extent attributable to the change of election, even though at the time the consent is filed the assessment would otherwise be prevented by the operation of any law or rule of law.¹⁸³⁹

2. Personal and Dependency Exemptions

Beginning in 2018, the §151 personal and dependency deduction is zero,¹⁸⁴⁰ except for a temporary deduction for seniors (the "enhanced deduction for seniors") and when determining an allowable deduction or whether a taxpayer is entitled to a deduction.¹⁸⁴¹ The enhanced deduction for seniors is available to non-itemizing and itemizing taxpayers and is discussed in V.B.30., above. The deduction for personal and dependency exemptions is discussed in detail in 513 T.M., Family and Household Transactions.

3. Standard Deduction

a. In General

An individual is given a choice between claiming the standard deduction or itemized deductions. Unlike other deductions, the standard deduction does not require the taxpayer to prove that expenditures have been made. The standard deduction is based, in part, on the notion that, even if they do not maintain records of deductible expenditures, all taxpayers are presumed to have made some expenditures that would be deductible. Thus, most individuals who do not elect to itemize deductions for the tax year may claim a standard deduction.¹⁸⁴² However, a taxpayer may not claim both the standard deduction and itemized deductions.¹⁸⁴³ Thus, a taxpayer will claim the standard deduction, only if the taxpayer's itemized deductions are less.

Example: S is an individual who has never been married and lives alone. In Year 1, S pays $3,250 in expenses that are categorized as itemized deductions. S's standard deduction is $6,350. Because the standard deduction is higher than S's itemized deductions, S claims the $6,350 standard deduction, but is not allowed to deduct the $3,250 in expenses as deductions.

b. Exceptions

Certain individuals may not claim the standard deduction.¹⁸⁴⁴ Technically, the standard deduction for ineligible individuals is zero. This is equivalent, however, to not allowing the standard deduction.

The standard deduction is not available to:

- a married individual who files a separate return and whose spouse elects to itemize deductions;¹⁸⁴⁵
- a nonresident alien individual;¹⁸⁴⁶
- an individual filing a return for a short period,¹⁸⁴⁷ because of a change in annual accounting period;¹⁸⁴⁸ and
- an estate, trust, common trust fund, or partnership.¹⁸⁴⁹

The IRS has advised that if one spouse properly selects head of household filing status and elects to itemize deductions, the other spouse is treated as filing a separate return and is not eligible for the standard deduction.¹⁸⁵⁰ The IRS also advised that the spouse who properly selects head of household filing status may elect the standard deduction, even if the other spouse elects to itemize deductions.¹⁸⁵¹

c. Amount of Standard Deduction

(1) In General

The standard deduction consists of two elements: the basic standard deduction¹⁸⁵² and the additional standard deduction.¹⁸⁵³ The basic standard deduction for married couples filing jointly and for surviving spouses is twice the basic standard deduction amount for unmarried taxpayers.¹⁸⁵⁴ Individual filers can find their standard deduction amount listed on Form 1040 or Form 1040-SR. Form 1040-SR, Tax Return for Seniors, is available for use by taxpayers age 65 and older. For more information on Form 1040-SR, see Instructions for Form 1040, which covers Form 1040-SR.

If an individual has a net disaster loss for the tax year, the basic standard deduction amount is increased by the net disaster loss. A net disaster loss is the excess of qualified disaster-related personal casualty losses for the tax year over personal casualty gains (as defined in §165(h)(3)(A)) for the tax year.¹⁸⁵⁵

The basic standard deduction amounts for recent years are set forth in Tables, Charts & Lists, Standard Deduction Tables by Year.

(2) Limitation for Certain Taxpayers

The basic standard deduction for an individual's tax year is limited if another taxpayer is permitted to claim a dependency exemption deduction for that individual.¹⁸⁵⁶ For these individuals, the basic standard deduction to which the individual would otherwise be entitled is limited to the greater of the general fixed amount¹⁸⁵⁷ or the individual's earned income increased by the supplemental fixed amount.¹⁸⁵⁸

The general fixed amount is $500,¹⁸⁵⁹ adjusted for inflation.¹⁸⁶⁰ The supplemental fixed amount is $250,¹⁸⁶¹ adjusted for inflation.¹⁸⁶² The inflation-adjusted amounts for recent years are listed in Tables, Charts & Lists, Standard Deduction Tables by Year.

Comment: It does not matter whether the other taxpayer actually claims the dependency exemption deduction for the individual. What matters is that it is allowable. Thus, even if it appears otherwise advantageous to do so, there is no benefit in deliberately forgoing a dependency exemption deduction.

Example 1: C, the 15-year-old child of M and D, recognizes gross income of $260 from compensation and $105 from interest. Assume the standard deduction is $6,350 and that the limited standard deduction for dependents is the greater of $1,050 ($500 statutory amount adjusted for inflation) or the sum of $350 ($250 statutory amount adjusted for inflation) and the individual's earned income. M and D provide almost all of C's support, and C's principal place of abode is the same as that of M and D. M and D may claim a dependency exemption deduction for C on their joint return. On C's return, which C files to obtain a refund of federal income taxes withheld from the compensation, C's standard deduction, which would otherwise be $6,350, is limited to the greater of $1,050 or $610 ($260 earned income increased by $350). C's standard deduction is $1,050.

Example 2: The facts are the same as in Example 1, except that C's compensation gross income is $1,800. C's standard deduction, which would otherwise be $6,350, is limited to the greater of $1,050 or $2,150 ($1,800 earned income increased by $350). C's standard deduction is $2,150.

Example 3: The facts are the same as in Example 1, except that C's compensation gross income is $6,180. C's standard deduction is $6,350. The limitation does not apply, because C's earned income increased by $350 is $6,530, which exceeds the $6,350 standard deduction to which C otherwise is entitled.

Example 4: The facts are the same as in Example 1, except that C's compensation gross income is $7,500. C's standard deduction is $6,350. The limitation does not apply, because C's earned income exceeds the $6,350 standard deduction to which C otherwise is entitled.

(3) Additional Standard Deduction

(a) In General

The additional standard deduction is the sum of each additional amount to which the taxpayer is entitled to by qualifying through age, blindness, or both.¹⁸⁶³

Each additional standard deduction amount for the aged and for the blind is $600,¹⁸⁶⁴ adjusted for inflation.¹⁸⁶⁵ The inflation-adjusted amounts for recent years are listed in Tables, Charts & Lists, Standard Deduction Tables by Year.

(b) Qualifying Through Age

The taxpayer is entitled to an additional standard deduction if the taxpayer attained age 65 before the close of the tax year.¹⁸⁶⁶ The taxpayer is entitled to another additional standard deduction if the taxpayer's spouse attained age 65, before the close of the tax year; and, the taxpayer is entitled to claim a personal exemption deduction¹⁸⁶⁷ for the spouse.¹⁸⁶⁸ If spouses, both of whom have attained age 65, file a joint return, each is entitled to an additional standard deduction and, thus, their total standard deduction reflects the basic standard deduction plus two additional standard deductions.¹⁸⁶⁹

Note: Form 1040-SR, Tax Return for Seniors, is available to taxpayers age 65 and older. Form 1040-SR filers can find their standard deduction by using the chart provided on the form.¹⁸⁷⁰

A taxpayer attains age 65 on the day preceding the taxpayer's 65th birthday.¹⁸⁷¹

Example: T was born on January 1, 1952. T attains age 65 on December 31, 2016, the day before T's 65th birthday. Thus, T is entitled to an additional standard deduction for 2016.¹⁸⁷²

Example: T's spouse was born on January 15, 1951, and died on January 14, 2016. T's spouse is considered age 65 at the time of death. However, if T's spouse died on January 13, 2016, T's spouse is not considered age 65 at time of death.

Observation: This rule differs from the one prescribed by the IRS for determining when a child attains a specific age for purposes of the dependent care, adoption, child, and earned income credits, the dependent care assistance, foster care, and adoption assistance exclusions, and the dependency exemption deduction.¹⁸⁷³ In these instances, a child attains a specific age on the anniversary of the date that the child was born, and not on the previous day. It is unknown why the IRS does not apply a uniform rule for purposes of determining when anyone attains a specified age.

(c) Qualifying Through Blindness

The taxpayer is entitled to an additional standard deduction if the taxpayer is blind at the close of the tax year.¹⁸⁷⁴ The taxpayer is entitled to another additional standard deduction if the taxpayer's spouse is blind at the close of the tax year and if the taxpayer may claim a personal exemption deduction¹⁸⁷⁵ for the spouse.¹⁸⁷⁶ If spouses, both of whom are blind, file a joint return, each is entitled to an additional standard deduction and, thus, their total standard deduction reflects the basic standard deduction plus two additional standard deductions.¹⁸⁷⁷

Comment: It is possible for a married couple to be entitled to four additional standard deductions: two additional amounts for blindness and two additional amounts for age.¹⁸⁷⁸

Note: If the taxpayer's spouse dies during the tax year, the determination of whether the spouse is blind is made as of the time of the spouse's death.¹⁸⁷⁹

A taxpayer is blind if either one of two conditions is satisfied.¹⁸⁸⁰ First, the taxpayer's central visual acuity does not exceed 20/200 in the better eye with correcting lenses.¹⁸⁸¹ Second, the taxpayer's visual acuity is greater than 20/200, but is accompanied by a limitation in the fields of vision such that the widest diameter of the visual field subtends to an angle no greater than 20 degrees.¹⁸⁸² The taxpayer must obtain, and maintain in their records, a statement from their eye doctor (e.g., ophthalmologist or optometrist) stating that the doctor has examined the taxpayer, or the taxpayer's spouse, and that, in the doctor's opinion, the taxpayer, or the taxpayer's spouse, meets at least one of the two conditions indicating blindness.¹⁸⁸³ The ophthalmologist's or optometrist's statement must document that the doctor examined the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse in the tax year for which the additional standard deduction for blindness is claimed, or that the doctor examined the person in an earlier year and that the visual impairment is irreversible.¹⁸⁸⁴

which was repealed for tax years beginning after 1986 and replaced with the additional standard deduction, should apply to the additional standard deduction. Greatly impaired vision does not qualify as blindness if the statutory blindness conditions are not satisfied.¹⁸⁸⁶ If the vision can be corrected only with special contact lenses that cause severe pain, infection, and ulcers, and that can be worn only for short periods, the blindness conditions are satisfied.¹⁸⁸⁷

4. Qualified Business Income Deduction

Individuals, trusts, and estates who invest in noncorporate businesses (i.e., sole proprietorships, partnerships, and S corporations) may be eligible to claim a deduction of up to 20% of the "qualified business income" earned by those businesses.¹⁸⁸⁸ The §199A qualified business income deduction is discussed in detail in 537 T.M., Qualified Business Income Deduction: Section 199A.

5. Charitable Contributions Deduction for Nonitemizers

For tax years beginning after 2025, individuals who do not elect to itemize deductions are permitted a charitable contribution deduction for qualified contributions up to $1,000 ($2,000 joint filers).¹⁸⁸⁹

For tax years beginning in 2021, individuals who did not elect to itemize deductions were permitted a charitable contribution deduction for qualified contributions up to $300 ($600 joint filers).¹⁸⁹⁰

For discussion of above-the-line deductions for charitable contributions in tax years beginning in 2020, see V.B.24., above. For further discussion of charitable deductions and contributions, see 521 T.M., Charitable Contributions: Income Tax Aspects.

6. Qualified Tip Deduction (2025–2028)

a. In General

For tax years beginning in 2025–2028, individuals may deduct up to $25,000 of qualified tips, subject to a phaseout of $100 for every $1,000 modified adjusted gross income (MAGI) exceeds $150,000 ($300,000 for joint filers).¹⁸⁹¹

Qualified tips are discussed in V.C.6.b., below.

Example — High Income Single Taxpayer

An employee who received $26,000 of qualified tips in 2025 filed as a single taxpayer and has MAGI of $200,000. Because $26,000 exceeds the §224(a) $25,000 limit, the ¹⁸⁹⁰ Former §170(p).

¹⁸⁹¹ §224, added by the One Big Beautiful Bill Act (OBBBA), Pub. L. No. 119-21, §70201(a); Reg. §1.224-1(a), §1.224-1(b)(1), §1.224-1(b)(2), T.D. 10044, 91 Fed. Reg. 19,026 (Apr. 13, 2026). MAGI for §224 purposes is AGI plus certain exclusions related to living abroad, in a U.S. territory, or Puerto Rico under §911, §931, and §933.

qualified tip amount is first reduced from $26,000 to $25,000. The employee's §224 qualified tip amount is further reduced (but not below zero) by $100 for each $1,000 by which MAGI exceeds $150,000 (i.e., the threshold for a single filer). Because the employee's MAGI exceeds $150,000 by $50,000, the employee first divides $50,000 by $1,000 to get 50. The employee's §224 deduction is reduced by $5,000 ($\100×50), from $25,000 to $20,000.¹⁸⁹²

Taxpayers must provide a valid social security number and married taxpayers must file a joint return to claim the deduction.¹⁸⁹³

Example — Qualified Tips Received by Both Spouses

Married taxpayers X and Y file a joint income tax return, have MAGI of $200,000, and both work in occupations that customarily and regularly received tips before 2025. In 2025, X receives $15,000, and Y receives $20,000, in qualified tips. Since their combined qualified tips exceed the $25,000 limitation, the total qualified tip amount is reduced from $35,000 to $25,000. Since their $200,000 MAGI does not exceed the joint filer $300,000 limitation, no further reduction is needed.¹⁸⁹⁴

Self-employed taxpayers' gross income from the trade or business generating qualified tips must exceed the sum of deductions allocable to the trade or business other than §224 for the tips to be deductible.¹⁸⁹⁵ Generally, this means the §224 deduction is limited to trade or business net income before the §224 deduction is taken.

Example — Self-Employed Individual Deduction Not Limited by §224(c)

A self-employed manicurist owns a nail salon and does not have other employment. The manicurist's gross income is $100,000, consisting of $70,000 of fees for services at the nail salon and $30,000 of qualified tips. The manicurist's total deductible expenses (other than the deduction for qualified tips) equal $40,000. The manicurist's gross income of $100,000 from the trade or business exceeds the sum of trade or business deductions other than qualified tips by $60,000 ($$100,000 - $40,000 = $60,000$). The manicurist is permitted to deduct $25,000 under §224.¹⁸⁹⁶

Example — Self-Employed Individual Deduction Limited by §224(c)

Assume the same facts as the prior example, except the manicurist has gross income of $75,000 ($55,000 of fees for services at the nail salon and $20,000 of qualified tips). The manicurist's total deductible expenses (other than the deduction for qualified tips) are $60,000; thus, gross income of $75,000 from the trade or business exceeds the sum of the deductions for that trade or business (other than qualified tips) by $15,000 ($$75,000 - $60,000$). Although the manicurist received $20,000 in qualified tips, the manicurist can only deduct $15,000 in qualified tips.¹⁸⁹⁷

The deduction for qualified tips is available to both itemizers and non-itemizers.¹⁸⁹⁸

Qualified tips allowed as a §224 deduction are excluded from qualified business income.¹⁸⁹⁹

Taxpayers report the qualified tips deduction on Schedule 1-A (Form 1040, Form 1040-SR, or Form 1040-NR).¹⁹⁰⁰

b. Qualified Tips

Qualified tips are voluntary "cash" tips received by an individual in an occupation in which tips were customary and regularly received before 2025, and not in the course of a specified service trade or business (§199A(d)(2)).¹⁹⁰¹ Specified service trades or businesses are discussed in V.C.6.c., below.

Voluntary tips are paid without consequence if not paid, are not negotiated, and are determined solely by the payor.¹⁹⁰²

Occupations that customarily and regularly received tips before 2025 are listed in Tables, Charts & Lists, Occupations That Customarily Received Tips Before 2025. Assistants and apprentices receiving tips are included in an occupation category if performing the same services.¹⁹⁰³

Cash tips can be paid by a "payor" via check, credit card, debit card, electronic settlement or mobile payment application, gift card, foreign currency, or tangible or intangible tokens that are readily exchangeable for a fixed amount in cash (such as casino chips), including tips received through a tipsharing arrangement. Cash tips do not include event tickets, meals, services, or other assets that are not exchangeable for a fixed cash amount.¹⁹⁰⁴ Cash tips also do not include digital assets.¹⁹⁰⁵

A cash tip payor is the ultimate recipient of services (usually the customer, client, or other service recipient), not an entity acting as a conduit to remit a tip to the ultimate recipient.¹⁹⁰⁶

Qualified tips must be separately reported on statements furnished to the individual under §6041(d)(3), §6041A(e)(3), §6050W(f)(2), or §6051(a)(18), or reported by the individual on Form 4137, Social Security and Medicare Tax on Unreported Tip Income (or successor), except for tax year 2025 under transition rules discussed at V.C.6.d., below.¹⁹⁰⁷

To be valid, social security numbers must have been issued before the due date of the return, including extensions. Reg. §1.224-1(f)(1). Spousal social security numbers are not required unless both filers are claiming a deduction. Reg. §1.224-1(f)(2).

¹⁸⁹⁶ Reg. §1.224-1(e)(2)(i) Ex. 1.

Qualified tips must not be negotiated or associated with adverse consequences if not paid. Service charges and automatic gratuities are not qualified tips, unless the customer may waive, recompute, or ignore.¹⁹⁰⁸

Example — Restaurant Imposes Automatic Service Charge

A restaurant automatically adds an 18% charge to bills for parties of six or more. Customer's bill includes the 18% charge on the tip line, and the total bill includes this amount. The bill also has a line labeled "additional tip amount." Customer adds 2% of the food and beverage on the additional tip amount line. The 18% charge is not a qualified tip because it is involuntary, but the voluntary 2% amount is a qualified tip.¹⁹⁰⁹

Example — Restaurant Uses Point of Sale Device

The bill for a meal is presented on an electronic handheld point of sale (POS) device. The POS device includes the charges for each food and beverage item and the applicable tax. The POS device also prompts the customer to leave a tip and provides the following options: 15%, 18%, 20%, other, and no tip. The customer selects 18% and pays the total balance via credit card through the POS device. The 18% amount is a qualified tip. The result would be the same if the customer were instead prompted with a tip slider that could reduce the tip down to zero; if the tip slider was subject to a minimum floor amount, only amounts above that floor could constitute a qualified tip.¹⁹¹⁰

Note: Employees who enter into a tip agreement as part of the Tip Rate Determination Agreement (TRDA) program or Gaming Industry Tip Compliance Agreement (GITCA) program may determine the amount of their qualified tips using the agreement's applicable tip rate (and amounts reported on Form 4137, Social Security and Medicare Tax on Unreported Tip Income) in lieu of reporting actual tips received.¹⁹¹¹

Unless received directly for services provided in the course of duties performed in an occupation that customarily and regularly received tips before 2025, and unless all other §224 and Reg. §1.224-1 requirements are met, amounts received by a manager or supervisor through a tip-sharing arrangement are not qualified tips.¹⁹¹²

Tips received for illegal activity, prostitution, or pornographic activity are not qualified tips.¹⁹¹³

Wages or payments for a good or service recharacterized as tips for purposes of claiming the deduction are not qualified tips.¹⁹¹⁴

Employer-paid tips and tips from entities directly owned (5% or more) by the payor are not qualified tips.¹⁹¹⁵

Reporting requirements for qualified tips are discussed in 643 T.M., Information Reporting to U.S. Persons — Payments Subject to Backup Withholding, at III.E.

c. Specified Service Trade or Business (SSTB)

Qualified tips do not include amounts received in the course of a specified service trade or business (SSTB).¹⁹¹⁶

SSTBs include the following fields:

- health;
- law;
- accounting;
- actuarial science;
- performing arts;
- consulting;
- athletics;
- financial services;
- brokerage services;
- investing and investment management;
- trading;
- dealing in securities, partnership interests, or commodities; or
- any trade or business where the principal asset of the business is the reputation or skill of one or more of its employees or owners.¹⁹¹⁷

Until January 1 of the calendar year following the year final SSTB regulations are issued, the IRS will treat tips received in an occupation that customarily and regularly received tips before 2025 as being received in a non-SSTB trade or business.¹⁹¹⁸

For a detailed discussion of SSTBs, see 537 T.M., Qualified Business Income Deduction: Section 199A, at III.C.

d. Transition Rules for Tax Year 2025

Treasury and the IRS did not revise tax year 2025 Form W-2, Form 1099-NEC, Form 1099-MISC, and Form 1099-K to account for the OBBBA qualified tip deduction information reporting requirements.¹⁹¹⁹

For tax year 2025, the qualified tips reporting requirements on statements furnished to the employee are satisfied if

The OBBBA §70201(f) added information reporting requirements for employers and other payors making payments of cash tips; these requirements are discussed in detail in 643 T.M., Information Reporting to U.S. Persons — Payments Subject to Backup Withholding, at III.E.

¹⁹¹¹ Reg. §1.224-1(c)(6). Using a TRDA or GITCA program to determine qualified tips does not affect audit protections otherwise applicable to the employee's agreement, and employees participating in the TRDA or GITCA program remain subject to §224 and Reg. §1.224-1(c)(6) requirements.

the employee's cash tips are reported on Form W-2, without separately accounting for the tips as required by §6051(a)(18). Also for tax year 2025, employees may use the employee's cash tips reported on Form W-2, box 14 (or on a separate statement), or calculate qualified tips as the sum of social security tips reported on Form W-2 and tips reported by the employee on Form 4070, Employee's Report of Tips to Employer (or similar substitute form). Tip amounts treated as income and reported on a Form 4137 filed with the employee's 2025 income tax return may also be treated as cash tips.¹⁹²⁰

Forms 1099 furnished to non-employees are not a separate cash tip accounting, and a non-employee may satisfy the requirement that qualified tips be furnished on a statement under §6041(d)(3), §6041A(e)(3), or §6050W(f)(2), if the non-employee's cash tips are included in the total amounts reported as other income:

- on Form 1099-MISC furnished to the non-employee;
- as nonemployee compensation on Form 1099-NEC furnished to the non-employee; or
- as payment card/third-party network transactions on Form 1099-K furnished to the non-employee.¹⁹²¹

Non-employees may calculate qualified tips (subject to §224 limitations) using earnings statements or other documentation such as receipts, point-of-sale system reports, daily tip logs, third party settlement organization records, or similar records.¹⁹²²

Example 1 — Tax Year 2025: Tips Included on Form W-2
Employee A is a restaurant server. A's employer reports $18,000 of social security tips on A's 2025 Form W-2. A did not report any additional tips on Form 4137. A may use $18,000 to calculate qualified tips.¹⁹²³

Example 2 — Tax Year 2025: Employee Reports Tips on Form 4070 and Form 4137

Employee B is a bartender. B reports $20,000 in 2025 tips to B's employer on Form 4070. B's 2025 Form W-2 reports $200,000 in box 1 (wages, tips, other compensation), an amount in excess of the social security wage base, and $15,000 in box 7 (social security tips). Additionally, B reports $4,000 of unreported tips on Form 4137 and includes this amount in income on B's Form 1040. B may use either the $15,000 from Form W-2, box 7, or the $20,000 reported on Form 4070 to calculate qualified tips. B may also include the $4,000 of unreported tips from Form 4137.¹⁹²⁴

Example 3 — Tax Year 2025: Self-Employed Person Receives Tips From Third-Party Settlement Organizations

D is a self-employed travel guide and sole proprietor. In 2025, D received $7,000 in tips from customers paid through a §6050W(b)(3) third-party settlement organization. D receives Form 1099-K showing $55,000 of total payments from an online booking platform that is also a third-party settlement organization. The Form 1099-K does not separately identify tips. However, D keeps a log of each tour that shows the date, customer, and tip amount received. Because D has daily tip logs substantiating the $7,000 tip amount, D may use the $7,000 tip amount to determine qualified tips.¹⁹²⁵

For tax year 2025, the IRS provided qualified tip deduction transitional relief in eight scenarios by not imposing §6721 (failure to file) or §6722 (failure to furnish) penalties for failures to file timely and correct information returns or failures to furnish timely and correct payee statements.¹⁹²⁶

7. Qualified Overtime Compensation (2025–2028)

a. In General

For tax years beginning after 2024 and before 2029, taxpayers may deduct up to $12,500 ($25,000 joint return) in qualified overtime compensation.¹⁹²⁷ The annual deduction is phased out (but not below zero) by $100 for each $1,000 by which the taxpayer's modified adjusted gross income (MAGI) exceeds $150,000 ($300,000 joint return).¹⁹²⁸ Qualified overtime compensation does not include §224(d) qualified tips. The deduction is available to both itemizers and non-itemizers.¹⁹²⁹

A valid social security number must be included on the taxpayer's return.¹⁹³⁰ A married taxpayer must file a joint return to claim the deduction.¹⁹³¹

A transition rule applies to reporting periods before January 1, 2026, allowing qualified overtime compensation accounting by any reasonable method specified by the Secretary.¹⁹³²

The deduction for qualified overtime compensation is reported on Schedule 1-A (Form 1040, Form 1040-SR, or Form 1040-NR).

b. Transition Rules for Tax Year 2025

Employers and other payors are not required to separately account for qualified overtime compensation for tax year 2025, so a separate accounting will only be furnished if entered on Form W-2, box 14 or provided on a separate statement.¹⁹³³ To claim a §225 deduction, individuals who are not furnished a separate accounting must make a reasonable effort to determine whether they are considered FLSA-eligible employees.¹⁹³⁴

An FLSA-eligible employee may treat the separate accounting requirement as satisfied if qualified overtime compensation is reported on Form W-2, Form 1099-NEC, or Form 1099-MISC, without regard to §6051(a)(19)'s qualified overtime compensation separate accounting requirement. Qualified overtime compensation can be calculated using information from documentation such as earnings or pay statements, invoices, or similar statements that support the amount. In the case of multiple employers, a different method may be used for each employer.¹⁹³⁵ Notice 2025-69 provides seven reasonable methods for calculating §225(c) qualified overtime compensation.¹⁹³⁶

Example 1 — Tax Year 2025: Payroll System Captures FLSA Overtime Premium A's payroll system shows totals of amounts paid to A in 2025, including the FLSA overtime premium. In 2025, Individual A was last paid wages on December 22, for the payroll period beginning on November 30, 2025, and ending on December 13, 2025. The payroll system shows $5,000 in "overtime premium" paid to A. To calculate 2025 qualified overtime compensation received, A may treat $5,000 as the FLSA overtime premium.¹⁹³⁷

Example 2 — Tax Year 2025: Pay Stub Presents FLSA Overtime Premium Assume the same facts as Example 1, except A's pay stub shows total overtime of $15,000, representing the FLSA overtime premium combined with the individual's regular wages for hours worked over 40 in a work week. To calculate 2025 qualified overtime compensation received, A may include $5,000 as the FLSA overtime premium (computed by dividing $15,000 by three, using the method described in Notice 2025-69, §III.B.2.(B)).¹⁹³⁸

Example 3 — Tax Year 2025: Employer Pays Overtime at Two Times Regular Rate of Pay B's employer pays overtime at a rate of two times regular pay, even though FLSA §7 only requires one and one-half times an employee's regular rate. B was paid $20,000 in overtime in 2025. B's last pay stub for 2025 shows "overtime premium" of $10,000, representing B's overtime premium paid at two times the regular rate. To calculate 2025 qualified overtime compensation received, B may include $5,000 as

FLSA overtime premium ($10,000 divided by two, using the method described in Notice 2025-69, §III.B.2.(C)).¹⁹³⁹

Example 4 — Tax Year 2025: Employer Pays Overtime at Two Times Regular Rate of Pay Assume the same facts as Example 3, but B's pay stub shows total overtime of $20,000, representing (B's overtime premium paid at two times the regular rate combined with B's regular wages for hours worked over 40 in a work week). To calculate 2025 qualified overtime compensation received, B may include $5,000 as FLSA overtime premium ($20,000 divided by four, using the method described in Notice 2025-69, §III.B.2.(D)).¹⁹⁴⁰

8. Itemized Deductions

a. In General

As discussed in V.C.1., above, an individual is given a choice between claiming the standard deduction or itemized deductions. Itemized deductions for taxpayers include medical and dental expenses, taxes, interest, charitable contributions, casualty and theft losses.¹⁹⁴¹

Under §67(b), miscellaneous itemized deductions are defined as all itemized deductions other than the following:

- the §163 interest deduction;¹⁹⁴²
- the §164 taxes deduction;¹⁹⁴³
- the §165 casualty and theft deduction, and the §165 wagering loss deduction;¹⁹⁴⁴

¹⁹⁴⁰ Notice 2025-69, §III.B.3. Ex. 4; see also Notice 2025-69, §III.B.2.(D) ("If the individual is paid overtime compensation at a rate in excess of one and one-half times the individual's regular rate for hours worked in excess of 40 hours in a workweek, as generally required by 29 USC §207(a) (for example, two times the individual's regular rate), and receives a statement that does not separately account for the FLSA Overtime Premium but does include an entry showing the aggregate dollar amount of overtime compensation at that higher rate for the hours worked over 40 hours combined with the portion of the individual's regular wages for the hours worked over 40 in a workweek covering the entire 2025 tax year, then the individual may multiply the aggregate dollar amount by an appropriately smaller fraction (for example, if overtime is paid at a rate of two times the regular rate, the appropriate fraction is one-fourth) and use the product.").

- the §171 amortizable bond premium deduction;¹⁹⁵³
- the §216 cooperative housing corporation deductions;¹⁹⁵⁴
- the deductions allowed by §162 for educator expenses;¹⁹⁵⁵ and
- the §63(c) standard deduction.¹⁹⁵⁶

b. Medical and Dental Expenses

An individual is allowed a deduction under §213 for medical expenses paid during the tax year to the extent that those expenses exceed 7.5% of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income for that year.¹⁹⁵⁷ After 2025, §213 deductions are subject to the §68(a) overall limitation on itemized deductions.¹⁹⁵⁸ The medical expense deduction is discussed in detail in 513 T.M., Family and Household Transactions.

c. Taxes

A taxpayer is allowed to deduct qualified taxes, regardless of whether the tax is paid or incurred in carrying on a trade or business or for the production of income.¹⁹⁵⁹ This deduction is discussed in detail in 525 T.M., State, Local, and Federal Taxes. For individuals, if the taxes are not incurred as part of a trade or business, then the deduction for qualified taxes is an itemized deduction. For further discussion of taxes incurred in carrying on a trade or business, see 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions.

- state, local, and foreign real property taxes;¹⁹⁶⁰
- state and local personal property taxes;¹⁹⁶¹
- state, local, and foreign income, war profits, and excess profits taxes;¹⁹⁶² and
- state and local sales taxes;¹⁹⁶³

Limitations apply to tax years beginning after 2017. Taxpayers can claim an itemized deduction for the aggregate of:

- (1) state and local real and personal property taxes not paid or accrued in carrying on a trade or business or investment activity described in §212; and
- (2) state and local income, war profits, and excess profits taxes (or state and local sales taxes in lieu of these taxes) paid or accrued in the tax year, up to the following limits:

- tax years 2018 through 2024, $10,000 ($5,000 married filing separate);
- tax year 2025, $40,000 ($20,000 married filing separate);
- tax year 2026, $40,400 ($20,200 married filing separate);
- tax years 2027 through 2029, 101% of the preceding calendar year limit (half for married filing separate);
- tax years after 2029, $10,000 ($5,000 married filing separate).¹⁹⁶⁴

In response to the limitation imposed by §164(b)(6), certain state and local governments created workarounds intended to allow taxpayers greater state and local tax deductions.¹⁹⁶⁵ To prevent taxpayers from circumventing the limitation under §164(b)(6), the IRS issued regulations providing that if a taxpayer makes a payment to, or transfers property to, or for the use of, a charitable organization, and the taxpayer receives, or expects to receive, a state or local tax credit in return for such payment, the state or local tax credit will constitute a return benefit, or quid pro quo, and will reduce the taxpayer's charitable contribution deduction.¹⁹⁶⁶ In addition, the §164 regulations provide a safe harbor for individuals that itemize their deductions and make payments to §170(c) entities in consideration for state or local tax credits. Such individuals may treat a payment for which a charitable deduction under §170 is disallowed under Reg. §1.170A-1(h)(3) as a payment of state or local tax under §164(a) in the tax year in which the payment is made to the extent that the resulting credit is applied to offset the individual's state or local tax liability for that tax year, or the preceding tax year.¹⁹⁶⁷

The limitation does not apply to state or local real and personal property taxes and foreign real property taxes when paid or accrued in carrying on a trade or business or investment activity described in §212. Additionally, the limitation does not apply to foreign income, war profits, and excess profits taxes regardless of whether paid or accrued in carrying on a trade or business or investment activity described in §212.¹⁹⁶⁸ Accordingly, foreign real property taxes not paid or accrued in carrying on a trade or business or investment activity described in §212 may not be deducted.¹⁹⁶⁹ Qualified self-employment taxes¹⁹⁷⁰ and qualified generation-skipping tax can be deducted.¹⁹⁷¹

The deductibility of taxes is discussed in detail in 525 T.M., State, Local, and Federal Taxes.

d. Interest

Certain types of interest can be deducted regardless of whether the interest is paid or incurred in carrying on a trade or business or for the production of income,¹⁹⁷² discussed in detail in 536 T.M., Interest Expense Deductions.

Some important examples include:

- qualified residence interest,¹⁹⁷³ discussed in 594 T.M., Tax Implications of Home Ownership;
- qualified education loan interest,¹⁹⁷⁴ discussed in 517 T.M., Educational Expenses and Credits;
- interest attributable to contracts under which personal property or educational services are purchased if the contract provides that payment of part or all of the purchase price is to be made in installments and in which carrying charges are separately stated, but the interest charge cannot be ascertained,¹⁹⁷⁵ discussed in detail in 565 T.M., Installment Sales;
- interest on timeshare and residential lot installment sales,¹⁹⁷⁶ discussed in detail in 565 T.M., Installment Sales;
- interest on nondealer installment sales,¹⁹⁷⁷ discussed in detail in 565 T.M., Installment Sales;
- original issue discount (OID),¹⁹⁷⁸ discussed in detail, in 181 T.M., Time Value of Money — Holders of Debt Instruments, and 182 T.M., Time Value of Money — Issuers of Debt Instruments;

• amortizable bond premium,¹⁹⁷⁹ discussed in detail in 181 T.M., Time Value of Money — Holders of Debt Instruments;

• net direct interest expense with respect to any market discount bond¹⁹⁸⁰ and net direct interest expense with respect to any short-term obligation,¹⁹⁸¹ discussed in detail in 181 T.M., Time Value of Money — Holders of Debt Instruments;

• investment interest to the extent of the taxpayer's net investment income,¹⁹⁸² and

• qualified passenger vehicle interest on indebtedness incurred for tax years beginning in 2025–2028 for the purchase of an “applicable passenger vehicle” for personal use.¹⁹⁸³

For individuals, if the interest is not incurred as part of a trade or business, the deduction for qualified interest is an itemized deduction. For a brief discussion of interest incurred in carrying on a trade or business see V.B.1.c., above.

e. Charitable Contributions

A deduction is allowed for any charitable contribution payment made within the tax year, regardless of whether the contribution is paid or incurred in carrying on a trade or business or for the production of income.¹⁹⁸⁴ For tax years beginning after 2025, otherwise allowable charitable contribution deductions will be allowed only to the extent the aggregate of such contributions exceeds 0.5% of the taxpayer's “contribution base” (adjusted gross income computed without regard to any §172 net operating loss carryback to the tax year) for the tax year. §170(b)(1)(I), added by the One Big Beautiful Bill Act (OBBBA), Pub. L. No. 119-21, §70425. The charitable contribution deduction is discussed in 521 T.M., Charitable Contributions: Income Tax Aspects and 794 T.M., Charitable Contributions by Corporations and Other Business Entities.

f. Personal Casualty and Theft Losses

Taxpayers are allowed to deduct personal casualty and theft losses, subject to limitations.¹⁹⁸⁵ For tax years beginning after 2017 and before 2026, the personal casualty and theft loss deduction is disallowed, except for losses attributable to a federally-declared disaster, and for tax years beginning after 2025, for losses attributable to a federally-declared disaster or a state declared disaster.¹⁹⁸⁶ Under an exception, however, a taxpayer can still use a personal casualty loss to offset a personal casualty gain.¹⁹⁸⁷

After 2025, the deductions for personal casualty losses under §165(c)(2) or §165(c)(3) and for wagering losses under §165(d) are subject to the §68(a) overall limitation on itemized deductions.¹⁹⁸⁸

For further discussion of personal casualty and theft losses, see 527 T.M., Loss Deductions.

g. Repayments of Previously Taxed Social Security Benefits

A taxpayer is allowed to deduct repayments of social security benefits only if two conditions are met. First, the deduction must be allowable under §165. Second, the deduction is only allowable to the extent the repayments exceed the social security benefits received by the taxpayer during the tax year and not repaid during the tax year.¹⁹⁸⁹ The amount of social security benefits received during the tax year that is considered in determining any inclusion of social security benefits in gross income is reduced by the amount of any repayment during the tax year of social security benefits previously received by the taxpayer, whether received in the same tax year.¹⁹⁹⁰ Thus, the deduction for any repayment is necessarily limited to situations in which the repayment exceeds the benefits received.

Example (1): R receives $6,500 of social security benefits during the tax year. The $6,500 represents the $9,500 that R would ordinarily have received, reduced by $3,000 of repayments withheld from R's benefit checks, because of amounts received by R in an earlier tax year that were mistakenly paid by the agency. R is not allowed to deduct the $3,000, regardless of whether R included any social security benefits in gross income for that earlier tax year.

Example (2): Assume the same facts as in Example (1) except that the amounts mistakenly paid in previous tax years aggregated $20,000. As a result, R received no checks for the year and was required to repay $10,500. Assume that had R not received the $10,500 in the earlier tax years, R would have included $10,500 less in gross income than R was required to include. R is allowed to deduct the $10,500. R is not allowed to deduct $20,000.

Example (3): Assume the same facts as in Example (2), except that if R had not received the $10,500 in the earlier tax years, R would have included $4,200 less in gross income than R was required to include. R is allowed to deduct $4,200. R is not allowed to deduct $20,000, nor is R allowed to deduct $10,500.

If the amount of the allowed deduction is $3,000 or less, the deduction is an itemized deduction, subject to the 2% floor discussed in V.C.4.j.(1), below. If the amount of the allowed deduction is more than $3,000, then the taxpayer may be allowed a credit instead of an itemized deduction under the

The inclusion of social security benefits in gross income is discussed in detail in 501 T.M., Gross Income: Overview and Conceptual Aspects.

h. Estate Taxes Paid on Items of Income in Respect of Decedent

Under §691(c), a taxpayer who includes an item of income in respect of a decedent (IRD) in gross income is allowed to deduct an amount based on the estate tax paid with respect to the item of IRD.¹⁹⁹² Examples of IRD include, but are not limited to, IRA distributions, retirement plan assets, salary, wages, unpaid interest and dividends, and sales commissions. The §691(c) deduction is discussed in detail, together with items of IRD, in 862 T.M., Income in Respect of a Decedent (Section 691) (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

i. Unrecovered Investment in Annuities

Unrecovered investment in an annuity contract is deductible under certain circumstances.¹⁹⁹³ Generally, if a taxpayer dies before the entire investment is recovered tax free, any unrecovered investment can be deducted on the taxpayer's final income tax return.¹⁹⁹⁴ The deductibility of unrecovered investment in annuities is discussed in detail in 821 T.M., Tax Issues of Employee Plan and Commercial Annuities (Estates, Gifts and Trusts Series).

j. Educator Expenses

Section 67(b)(13) provides that a taxpayer is allowed to deduct certain educator expenses under §162. Section 67(g) defines educator expenses.¹⁹⁹⁵ The deduction for such educator expenses is discussed in 517 T.M., Educational Expenses and Credits.

k. Impairment-Related Work Expenses

Under §67(b)(6), a deduction allowable for impairment-related work expenses is not a miscellaneous itemized deduction. Impairment-related work expenses are expenses that satisfy two conditions.¹⁹⁹⁶ First, the expense must be incurred by a handicapped individual¹⁹⁹⁷ for attendant care services at the individual's place of employment or for other expenses in connection with that place of employment necessary for the indi-

I. Limitations

(1) Overall Limitation on Itemized Deductions

(a) Computation of Limitation

Under §68, individual taxpayers must reduce the amount of otherwise allowable itemized deductions by 2/37 of the lesser of two amounts: 1) such amount of itemized deductions; or 2) the taxable income of the taxpayer for the tax year (determined without regard to §68 and increased by such amount of itemized deductions) that exceeds the dollar amount under §1 at which the 37% rate bracket begins for the taxpayer.²⁰⁰⁰

Note: For tax years 2018–2025, the §68 limitation on itemized deductions does not apply.²⁰⁰¹

(b) Coordination with Other Limitations

All other statutory limitations on itemized deductions are applied before application of the overall limitation.²⁰⁰²

(c) Pease Limitation for Tax Years Before 2018

For tax years before 2018, the overall limitation on itemized deductions (Pease limitation) applied to certain individual taxpayers.²⁰⁰³ The §68 limitation applied only to individual taxpayers whose adjusted gross incomes exceeded the applicable amount. Generally, taxpayers whose adjusted gross incomes exceeded the applicable amount had to reduce the amount of otherwise allowable itemized deductions by the lesser of 3% of the excess of adjusted gross income over the applicable amount, or 80% of the amount of otherwise allowable itemized deductions. Thus, because the phase-out of the value of itemized deductions was capped at 80%, a taxpayer was at least allowed to deduct 20% of the value of the taxpayer's itemized deductions.

Example: B and C are married taxpayers who file a joint return for 2017. Their adjusted gross income for 2017 is $320,000. Their otherwise allowable itemized deductions for 2017 are $25,000. The excess of adjusted gross income over the applicable amount is $6,200 ($320,000 – $313,800). Three percent of that $6,200 excess is $186 ($6,200 × 3%). Eighty percent of the amount of otherwise allowable itemized deductions is $20,000 ($25,000 × 80%). The lesser of $186 and $20,000 is $186. B and C must reduce the amount of their otherwise allowable itemized deductions by $186. Assuming no other limitations apply, B and C may deduct $24,814 of itemized deductions in 2017 ($25,000 – $186).

(2) Miscellaneous Itemized Deductions for Tax Years Before 2018

Miscellaneous itemized deductions are not allowed for tax years beginning after 2017.²⁰⁰⁴ When miscellaneous itemized deductions were available under §67, an individual could deduct miscellaneous itemized deductions only to the extent that the total of these deductions exceeded 2% of the individual's adjusted gross income.²⁰⁰⁵ Generally, miscellaneous itemized deductions referred to most itemized deductions allowed in computing taxable income in contrast to above-the-line deductions, discussed in V.B., above.²⁰⁰⁶

VI. Deductions Allowable to Corporations

A. Introduction

Generally, a corporation is treated as a separate tax-paying entity from its shareholders.²⁰⁰⁷ Thus, unlike other business entities, such as partnerships or single-member limited liability companies, corporations are generally taxed on their net income, for tax years beginning after December 31, 2017, at a flat rate of 21%²⁰⁰⁸ and, for tax years beginning before January 1, 2018 at graduated rates up to 35%.²⁰⁰⁹ Apart from certain special classes of corporations,²⁰¹⁰ the taxation of corporate income is generally based on taxable income. Taxable income begins with gross income, increased and decreased by various items. Generally, a corporation can deduct all ordinary and necessary expenses that are paid or incurred during the taxable year in carrying on a trade or business.²⁰¹¹ These include reasonable compensation, repairs and maintenance, bad debts, rents, taxes and licenses, interest, charitable contributions, depreciation, depletion, advertising, contributions to pension and profit-sharing plans, contributions to employee benefit programs, and other specifically allowed deductions. To determine taxable income, corporations are subject to special rules regarding the timing and deductibility of certain types of expenses, and available accounting methods. For an overview of the taxation of corporations, see 750 T.M., Corporate Overview.

B. Specific Deductions Allowed to Corporations

1. Dividends Received Deductions

Under §243²⁰¹² and §245,²⁰¹³ corporations are allowed a deduction for qualifying dividends received. The §243 and §245 dividends received deductions are discussed in detail in 764 T.M., Current Distributions — Cash and Property.

2. Dividends Paid Deductions

Several different code provisions allow corporations a deduction for qualifying dividends paid, such as:

- The §561 dividends paid deduction, discussed in detail in 797 T.M., Personal Holding Companies;

- The §547 personal holding company deficiency dividends deduction, discussed in detail in 797 T.M., Personal Holding Companies; and

- The §860 regulated investment company and real estate investment trust deficiency dividend deduction, discussed in detail in 740 T.M., Taxation of Regulated Investment Companies and Their Shareholders, and 742 T.M., Real Estate Investment Trusts.

3. Amortization of Disallowed Mineral Deductions

Under §291(b)(2), a corporation is allowed to deduct amortization with respect to the amount of mineral deductions disallowed under §291(b)(1).²⁰¹⁴ The §291(b)(1) disallowance is discussed in detail in 603 T.M., Mineral Properties Other Than Gas and Oil — Operation.

4. Transfer of a Residual Interest in a REMIC

Any tax imposed under §860E(e)(6)(A) on any excess inclusion with respect to a residual interest in a real estate mortgage investment conduit (REMIC) held by a pass-through entity of which a disqualified organization is a member is deductible in determining the gross income with respect to the residual interest.²⁰¹⁵ The §860E(e)(6)(A) tax is discussed in detail in 741 T.M., REMICs, Mortgage REITs, Mortgage Trusts and Other Real Estate Mortgage Securitization Vehicles.

C. Deductions Allowable to Specific Entities

1. Deductions Allowable to Terminal Railroad Corporations

a. In General

Under §281(a)(1)(B), no deduction otherwise allowable to a terminal railroad corporation is disallowed because of the discharge of liability exclusion of §281(a)(1)(A).²⁰¹⁶ Section 281 is to be construed and administered to accomplish relief to terminal railroads.²⁰¹⁷ Shareholders of terminal railroad corporations are treated consistent with this deduction preservation provision.²⁰¹⁸

However, the §281(a)(1)(B) deduction preservation provision does not apply for a taxable year unless all the shareholders of the terminal railroad corporation agreed in writing before the beginning of that taxable year that the provision would apply.²⁰¹⁹ Additionally, this provision does not apply to the extent that it would otherwise create or increase a net operating loss for the terminal railroad corporation.²⁰²⁰

²⁰⁰⁷ There are several statutory and judicial limitations to the general principle of treating a corporation as a separate taxable entity, such as §267, §269, §318, and §482; and the business purpose, substance over form, and step transaction doctrines. These limitations are typically designed to prevent the use of the corporate form for tax avoidance purposes and can result in the denial of corporate deductions or an allocation of additional income to a corporation.

²⁰¹³ The TCJA reduced the 80% dividends received deduction to 65% and the 70% dividends received deduction to 50%. §245, as amended by the TCJA, Pub. L. No. 115-97, §13002(b). See Reg. §1.245-1(a)(1).

b. Discharge of Liability Exclusion

The discharge of liability exclusion provides that the terminal railroad corporation is not considered to have received or accrued as income the portion of any liability of a railroad corporation, with respect to related terminal services provided by the corporation, which is discharged by crediting the liability with an amount of related terminal income.²⁰²¹ The exclusion also provides that the corporation is not considered to have received or accrued as income the portion of any charge which would be made by the corporation for related terminal services provided by it, but which is not made as a result of taking related terminal income into account in computing the charge.²⁰²²

c. Terminal Railroad Corporation

A terminal railroad corporation is a corporation that satisfies six conditions.²⁰²³ First, it must be a domestic²⁰²⁴ railroad corporation. Second, it must not be a member, other than as a common parent corporation, of an affiliated group.²⁰²⁵ Third, all of its shareholders must be rail carriers subject to part A of subtitle IV of title 49.²⁰²⁶ Fourth, its primary business must be the providing of railroad terminal and switching facilities and services to rail carriers subject to part A of subtitle IV of title 49 and to the shippers and passengers of those railroad corporations.²⁰²⁷ Fifth, a substantial part of its services for the taxable year must be rendered to one or more of its shareholders.²⁰²⁸ Sixth, each shareholder must compute its taxable income on the basis of a taxable year beginning or ending on the same day that the corporation's taxable year begins or ends.²⁰²⁹

d. Related Terminal Income

Related terminal income is any of four types of income of a terminal railroad corporation derived directly by the corporation.²⁰³⁰ The first type is income from services or facilities of a character ordinarily and regularly provided by terminal railroad corporations for railroad corporations or for the employees, passengers, or shippers of railroad corporations.²⁰³¹ The second type is income from the use by persons other than railroad corporations of portions of a facility, or a service, which is used primarily for railroad purposes.²⁰³² For these purposes, a substantial addition to a facility constructed after October 23, 1962, is treated as a separate facility.²⁰³³ The third type is income from any railroad corporation for services or facilities provided by the terminal railroad corporation in connection with railroad operations.²⁰³⁴ The fourth type is income from the United States in payment for facilities or services in connection with mail handling.²⁰³⁵

e. Related Terminal Services

Related terminal services include only services and the use of facilities taken into account in computing related terminal income.²⁰³⁶

2. Deductions Allowable to Financial Institutions

a. Reserves for Losses on Bank Loans

(1) In General

Under §585(a), banks, other than large banks, are allowed to deduct a reasonable addition to a reserve for bad debts.²⁰³⁷ The deduction is in lieu of any §166 bad debt deduction.²⁰³⁸ Essentially, an eligible bank is allowed to estimate its expected write-offs based on historical experience. In determining whether a debt is worthless for this purpose, and in computing the addition to a bad debt reserve with respect to the debt, Federal Savings and Loan Insurance Corporation (FSLIC) assistance with respect to the debt must be taken into account.²⁰³⁹

Note: the FSLIC was abolished by the Financial Institutions Reform, recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 (FIRREA), Pub. L. No. 101-73. FIRREA created the FSLIC Resolution Fund (FRF), the Resolution Trust Corporation (RTC), and the Office of Thrift Supervision (OTS), and transferred the assets and liabilities and regulatory activities of the FSLIC to other agencies and funds, including the FRF and the RTC. FIRREA also designated the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) as the administrator of funds formerly supervised by the FSLIC. The IRS has advised that in determining the §585 bad debt deduction, a bank that holds servicing rights to mortgages owned by others is not permitted to include those mortgages in its total loans outstanding.²⁰⁴⁰

(2) Bank

For purposes of the §585 deduction,²⁰⁴¹ a bank is a bank or trust company that satisfies three conditions.²⁰⁴² First, the bank or trust company must be incorporated and doing business under the laws of the United States, including laws relating to the District of Columbia, or of any state.²⁰⁴³ Second, a substantial part of the bank's or trust company's business must consist of receiving deposits and making loans or discounts, or of exercising fiduciary powers similar to those permitted to national banks under authority of the Comptroller of the Currency.²⁰⁴⁴

Third, the bank or trust company must be subject by law to supervision and examination by state or federal authority having supervision over banking institutions.²⁰⁴⁵ A bank includes a domestic building and loan association.²⁰⁴⁶

For purposes of the §585 deduction, a bank also includes any corporation that would otherwise be a bank but for the fact that it is a foreign corporation.²⁰⁴⁷ However, the §585 deduction applies to such foreign banks only with respect to outstanding loans on which the interest is effectively connected with the conduct of a banking business within the United States.²⁰⁴⁸

(3) Addition to Reserve for Bad Debts

The reasonable addition to the reserve for bad debt allowed as a deduction under §585 is an amount determined by the taxpayer that does not exceed the amount computed under the experience method.²⁰⁴⁹ The experience method involves the determination of the six-year moving average amount and the base year amount,²⁰⁵⁰ with special rules for new financial institutions.²⁰⁵¹

(4) Restrictions on Large Banks

The §585 deduction does not apply to large banks.²⁰⁵² No deduction for an addition to reserves for bad debts is allowed to a large bank under any other deduction provision.²⁰⁵³ A large bank is a bank that for any taxable year beginning after 1986, satisfies either of two conditions.²⁰⁵⁴ First, the average adjusted bases of all assets of the bank must exceed $500,000,000.²⁰⁵⁵ Second, the bank must be a member of a parent-subsidiary controlled group²⁰⁵⁶ and the average adjusted bases of all assets of the group exceed $500,000,000.²⁰⁵⁷ Special rules apply to any bank that becomes a large bank in a taxable year following a taxable year in which it maintained a reserve for bad debts.²⁰⁵⁸

b. Interest and Dividends Paid on Deposits by Membership Banks

(1) In General

Under §591, membership banks are allowed to deduct depositor interest and dividends.²⁰⁵⁹ The deduction is not disallowed merely because the depositor interest and dividends are subject to the terms of a pledge agreement between the bank and the depositor or holder of an account.²⁰⁶⁰ Amounts deductible under §591 are not deductible under §163 even if a deduction under §163 would be more advantageous.²⁰⁶¹

(2) Depositor Interest and Dividends

(a) In General

Depositor interest and dividends are amounts that satisfy two conditions.²⁰⁶² First, the amounts must be paid to, or credited to the accounts of, depositors or holders of accounts as dividends or interest on their deposits or withdrawable accounts.²⁰⁶³ Second, the amounts paid or credited must be withdrawable on demand subject only to customary notice of intention to withdraw.²⁰⁶⁴ Liquidating dividends are not deductible.²⁰⁶⁵

(b) Serial Association and Bonus Plan Amounts

The §591 deduction is not precluded merely because the bank operates in whole or in part as a serial association, maintains a bonus plan, or issues shares, or accepts deposits, subject to fines, penalties, forfeitures, or other withdrawal fees, and requires that amounts invested and credited to series shares must be withdrawn in multiples of even shares or has the right, pursuant to by-law, contract, or otherwise, to retain or recover a portion of the total amount invested in or credited to the shares or deposits, bonus account, or series of shares, as a fine, penalty, forfeiture, or other withdrawal fee.²⁰⁶⁶ This provision does not apply if the original issue discount rules,²⁰⁶⁷ discussed, in detail, in 181 T.M., Time Value of Money — Holders of Debt Instruments, and 182 T.M., Time Value of Money — Issuers of Debt Instruments; apply to deposits made with respect to a certificate of deposit, time deposit, bonus plan, or other deposit arrangement.²⁰⁶⁸

(3) Membership Banks

For purposes of the §591 deduction, a membership bank is any mutual savings bank, cooperative bank, domestic building and loan association, and any other savings institution chartered and supervised as a savings and loan or similar association under federal or state law.²⁰⁶⁹ It also includes any bank that has capital stock represented by shares, and which is subject to, and operates under, federal or state laws relating to mutual savings banks.²⁰⁷⁰

c. Other Deductions

Other deductions specific to financial institutions include:

- The §166 bad debt deduction is allowed to banks with respect to debts that are evidenced by a security.²⁰⁷¹ This deduction is allowed notwithstanding the limitations of §165(g)(1) and §166(e).²⁰⁷² For a detailed discussion of the §166 bad debt discussion, see 538 T.M., Bad Debts.

- Special assessments on insured depository institutions imposed by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) and designed to capitalize the Savings Association Insurance Fund²⁰⁷³ are deductible under §162.²⁰⁷⁴

- Special assessments on insured depository institutions imposed by the FDIC and designed to capitalize the Deposit Insurance Fund are deductible in the taxable years in which the §461 all events test is met. In this context, the all events test is not treated as met any earlier than when the liability for the special assessments was established (i.e., November 29, 2023, when the FDIC adopted a final rule implementing the special assessments) and when economic performance occurs. The special assessments are not subject either to the §162(r) deduction limitations for FDIC premiums or to capitalization under §263(a).²⁰⁷⁵

3. Deductions Allowable to Health Insurance Organizations

a. In General

Health insurance organizations are allowed a health insurance deduction.²⁰⁷⁶ In AM 2014-007, to determine if the eligible health organization could claim the deduction, the IRS decided the two main issues to resolve were whether the Blue Cross and Blue Shield (BCBS) organization had (1) a qualifying liability or expense in connection with a cost-plus contract under §833(b)(1)(A)(i) and (2) incurred expenses in connection with the administration of a claim under §833(b)(1)(A)(ii).²⁰⁷⁷ The IRS described a cost-plus contract under §833(b)(1)(A)(i), as a self-insurance arrangement offered by BCBS organizations under which a BCBS organization will pay all of a self-insured plan's covered claims from its own bank account and the self-insured plan will, in turn, pay the BCBS organization for the claims plus a negotiated amount to cover the BCBS organization's administrative expenses and profit.²⁰⁷⁸ The IRS also noted that a BCBS organization could not meet the second requirement under §833(b)(1)(A)(ii) if it was reimbursed for the expenses incurred in connection with the administration of a claim.²⁰⁷⁹

b. Health Insurance Organizations

(1) In General

Health insurance organizations are any existing Blue Cross/Blue Shield organization,²⁰⁸⁰ any deemed Blue Cross/Blue Shield organization,²⁰⁸¹ and any other health insurance organization meeting certain requirements.²⁰⁸² However, a "health insurance organization" does not include any organization with a medical loss ratio less than 85%.²⁰⁸³ An organization's medical loss ratio is calculated by dividing the total premium revenue expended on reimbursement for clinical services and activities that improve health care quality²⁰⁸⁴ provided to enrollees under its policies during a tax year divided by the organization's total premium revenue for the taxable year. For taxable years beginning after December 31, 2015, the numerator and denominator compute the expenses using a 3-year period corresponding to the way those expenses are computed under §2718 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. §201, et. seq.) and the regulations thereunder.²⁰⁸⁵

(2) Existing Blue Cross or Blue Shield Organization

An existing Blue Cross or Blue Shield organization is any Blue Cross or Blue Shield organization that satisfies three conditions:²⁰⁸⁶

- The organization must have been in existence on August 16, 1986;²⁰⁸⁷
- The organization must be exempt from tax for its last taxable year beginning before January 1, 1987;²⁰⁸⁸ and Use of the three-year period is phased in for the §833 computation so that medical loss ratio is computed on a one-year basis for the first tax year beginning after December 31, 2013, and on a two-year basis for the first tax year beginning after December 31, 2014. Reg. §1.833-1(c)(2). The medical loss ratio is calculated according to the rules in Reg. §1.833-1, discussed further in 201 T.M., Taxation of Domestic Insurance Companies. See AM 2016-002 for guidance on applying the §481(a) rules to changes in accounting methods for unearned premiums by Blue Cross/Blue Shield organizations by reason of failing, or subsequently meeting, the medical loss ratio requirement.

- No material change must have occurred in the operations of the organization or in its structure after August 16, 1986, and before the close of its taxable year.²⁰⁸⁹

To the extent permitted by the IRS, any successor to an existing Blue Cross or Blue Shield organization and any organization resulting from the merger or consolidation of existing Blue Cross or Blue Shield organizations is treated as an existing Blue Cross or Blue Shield organization.²⁰⁹⁰

(3) Deemed Blue Cross or Blue Shield Organization

A deemed Blue Cross or Blue Shield organization is an organization that satisfies five conditions:²⁰⁹¹

- It is organized under and governed by state laws which are specifically and exclusively applicable to not-for-profit health insurance or health service type organizations;²⁰⁹²
- It is not a Blue Cross or Blue Shield organization or health maintenance organization;²⁰⁹³
- The organization must have been in existence on August 16, 1986;²⁰⁹⁴
- The organization must be exempt from tax for its last taxable year beginning before January 1, 1987;²⁰⁹⁵ and
- No material change must have occurred in the operations of the organization or in its structure after August 16, 1986, and before the close of its taxable year.²⁰⁹⁶

(4) Other Health Insurance Organization

Any other organization is a health insurance organization for the taxable year if it satisfies six conditions:²⁰⁹⁷

- Substantially all of its activities must involve the providing of health insurance;²⁰⁹⁸
- At least 10% of the health insurance, other than Medicare supplemental coverage, provided by the organization must be provided to individuals and small groups.²⁰⁹⁹ A small group is the lesser of 15 individuals²¹⁰⁰ or the number of individuals required for a small group under state law;²¹⁰¹

- The organization must provide continuous full-year open enrollment, including conversions, for individuals and small groups;²¹⁰²
- The organization's policies covering individuals must provide full coverage of preexisting conditions of high-risk individuals without a price differential and with a reasonable waiting period, and coverage is provided without regard to age, income, or employment status of individuals under age 65;²¹⁰³
- At least 35% of the organization's premiums must be determined on a community rated basis;²¹⁰⁴ and
- No part of the organization's earnings may inure to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual.²¹⁰⁵

c. Computation of Deduction

(1) In General

The health insurance deduction equals the excess, if any, of 25% of the claims cost minus the adjusted surplus as of the beginning of the taxable year.²¹⁰⁶ The claims cost is the sum of the claims incurred during the taxable year,²¹⁰⁷ plus the liabilities incurred during the taxable year under cost-plus contracts,²¹⁰⁸ plus the expenses incurred during the taxable year in connection with the administration, adjustment, or settlement of claims.²¹⁰⁹

(2) Adjusted Surplus

(a) In General

The adjusted surplus as of the beginning of the taxable year is the adjusted surplus as of the beginning of the preceding taxable year increased by the amount of any adjusted taxable income for that preceding taxable year or decreased by the amount of any adjusted net operating loss for that preceding taxable year.²¹¹⁰ In computing adjusted surplus, only items attributable to the health-related business of the health insurance organization are taken into account.²¹¹¹

plus as of the beginning of the organization's first taxable year beginning after 1986 is its surplus at that time.²¹¹² If a newly formed corporation acquires the assets of existing Blue Cross/Blue Shield organizations in statutory mergers, it must combine the adjusted surplus of the acquired Blue Cross/Blue Shield organizations to arrive at its adjusted surplus for its first taxable year.²¹¹³ For other health insurance organizations, the adjusted surplus as of the beginning of the organization's first taxable year in which it becomes an other health insurance organization is its surplus at that time.²¹¹⁴ Surplus equals the excess of the organization's total assets over its total liabilities as shown on its annual statement.²¹¹⁵

(3) Adjusted Taxable Income and Net Operating Loss

Adjusted taxable income for a taxable year is taxable income for that taxable year determined without regard to the health insurance deduction,²¹¹⁶ without regard to any carryforward or carryback to that taxable year,²¹¹⁷ and by increasing gross income by an amount equal to the net exempt income for the taxable year.²¹¹⁸

Adjusted net operating loss for a taxable year is the net operating loss for that taxable year determined without regard to the health insurance deduction,²¹¹⁹ without regard to any carryforward or carryback to that taxable year,²¹²⁰ and by increasing gross income by an amount equal to the net exempt income for the taxable year.²¹²¹

Net exempt income is the sum of two amounts.²¹²² The first amount is any tax-exempt interest received or accrued during the taxable year, reduced by any amount not otherwise deductible that would have been allowable as a deduction if the interest were not tax-exempt.²¹²³ The second amount is the aggregate deductions under §243 and §245, reduced by the amount of any §832(b)(5)(B) loss reserve deductions attributable thereto.²¹²⁴ The §243 and §245 dividends received deductions are discussed in detail in 764 T.M., Current Distributions — Cash and Property.

Note: The deduction under §833(b) is not allowed for purposes of the Alternative Minimum Tax.²¹²⁵ The alternative minimum tax is discussed in I.C.3., above, and in detail in 587 T.M.,

*Noncorporate Alternative Minimum Tax and 752 T.M., Corporate Alternative Minimum Tax.*²¹²⁶

d. Limitation

The deduction is limited to the health insurance organization's taxable income for the taxable year, determined without regard to the health insurance deduction.²¹²⁷

4. Deductions Allowable to Cooperatives

Cooperatives are allowed five special deductions.²¹²⁸ These deductions are discussed in detail in 744 T.M., Taxation of Cooperatives and Their Patrons. These deductions are allowable to exempt farmers' cooperatives²¹²⁹ and any corporation operating on a cooperative basis other than tax-exempt organizations, mutual savings and similar banks, insurance companies, and providers of electric energy or telephone service to persons in rural areas.²¹³⁰ The five deductions are as follows:

- Under §1382(b)(1), cooperatives are allowed to deduct amounts paid during the payment period as patronage dividends,²¹³¹ to the extent paid in money, qualified written notices of allocation,²¹³² or other property, except nonqualified written notices of allocation²¹³³ with respect to patronage occurring during the taxable year.²¹³⁴
- Under §1382(b)(2), cooperatives are allowed to deduct amounts paid during the payment period in money or other property, other than written notices of allocation, in redemption of a nonqualified written notice of allocation²¹³⁵ that was paid as a patronage dividend during the payment period for the taxable year during which patronage occurred.²¹³⁶
- Under §1382(b)(3), cooperatives are allowed to deduct amounts paid during the payment period for the taxable year as per-unit retain allocations²¹³⁷ to the extent paid in money, qualified per-unit retain certificates,²¹³⁸ or property (except nonqualified per-unit retain certificates),²¹³⁹ with respect to marketing occurring during the taxable year.²¹⁴⁰

VII. Deductions Allowed to Trusts and Estates

A. Introduction

Generally, deductions allowable to individuals are also allowable to trusts and estates, such as trade or business expenses, interest, taxes, casualty and theft losses, bad debt, investment expenses.²¹⁴⁵ For further discussion of deductions allowed to individuals, see V., above. However, special rules apply to the allowance of certain deductions to trusts and estates.²¹⁴⁶ For example, a backup withholding credit deduction and a distributions deduction, not allowable to individuals, are allowable to trusts and estates.²¹⁴⁷ Specific trust and estate deductions are discussed in VII.B., below.

B. Specific Trust and Estate Deductions

1. Personal Exemption

Trusts and estates are allowed a personal exemption deduction.²¹⁴⁸ The personal exemption deduction for trusts and estates is discussed in 852 T.M., Income Taxation of Trusts and Estates (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

2. Charitable Contribution Deduction

Trusts and estates are allowed a deduction for amounts paid or permanently set aside for a charitable purpose.²¹⁴⁹ Charitable contribution deductions for trusts and estates are discussed in 852 T.M., Income Taxation of Trusts and Estates (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

3. Net Operating Loss Deduction

Trusts and estates are allowed the net operating loss deduction.²¹⁵⁰ The net operating loss deduction is described in 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions, and is discussed in detail in 539 T.M., Net Operating Losses — Concepts and Computations.

4. Depreciation and Depletion Deductions

Trusts and estates are allowed deductions for depreciation, cost recovery, and depletion.²¹⁵¹ Depreciation and depletion allowable to beneficiaries is described in 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions. The depreciation deduction is discussed in detail in 530 T.M., Depreciation: General Concepts; Non-ACRS Rules, 533 T.M., Amortization of Intangibles, and 531 T.M., Depreciation: MACRS and ACRS. The depletion deduction is discussed in detail in 603 T.M., Mineral Properties Other Than Gas & Oil — Operation, and 605 T.M., Oil and Gas Transactions.

5. Pollution Control Facility Amortization Deduction

Trusts and estates are allowed deductions for pollution control facility amortization²¹⁵² and for goodwill and intangibles amortization²¹⁵³ in the same manner as are individuals.²¹⁵⁴ The §169 pollution control facility amortization deduction is described in 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions, and is discussed in detail in 530 T.M., Depreciation: General Concepts; Non-ACRS Rules. The §197 goodwill and intangibles amortization deduction is described in 505 T.M., Trade or Business Expenses and For-Profit Activity Deductions, and is discussed in detail in 533 T.M., Amortization of Intangibles.

6. Backup Withholding Credit Deduction

Trusts and estates are allowed to deduct an amount equal to the backup withholding credit allocated to beneficiaries.²¹⁵⁵ The backup withholding credit deduction is discussed in detail in 852 T.M., Income Taxation of Trusts and Estates (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

7. Distributions Deduction

Simple trusts are allowed to deduct the amount of the income for the tax year that is required to be distributed currently.²¹⁵⁶ The distributions deduction for simple trusts is discussed in detail in 860 T.M., Revocable Inter Vivos Trusts (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series). Estates and complex trusts are allowed to deduct the sum of any amount of income for the tax year required to be distributed currently²¹⁵⁷ and any other amounts properly paid or credited or required to be distributed for that tax year.²¹⁵⁸ The distribution deduction for estates and complex trusts is discussed in detail in 852 T.M., Income Taxation of Trusts and Estates (Estates, Gifts, and Trusts Series).

8. Section 199A Qualified Business Income Deduction

Both trusts and estates are entitled to take advantage of the 20% qualified business income deduction.²¹⁵⁹ The §199A qualified business income deduction is discussed in detail in 537 T.M., Qualified Business Income Deduction: Section 199A.

C. Two Percent Floor on Miscellaneous Deductions for Trusts and Estates

Miscellaneous itemized deductions are not available for tax years beginning after 2017.²¹⁶⁰ The adjusted gross income of an estate or trust is computed in the same manner as for an individual, except that deductions for costs that are paid or incurred in connection with the administration of the estate or trust and that would not have been incurred if the property were not held in the trust or estate are allowable in arriving at adjusted gross income. That is, instead of being treated as miscellaneous itemized deductions, costs that qualify under §67(e) are deductible in full above-the-line. The IRS amended the regulations to clarify that §67(e) deductions are not miscellaneous itemized de-
